Summary

Bianchi served as an assistant director for Health Policy in the Office of Policy Development, a part of the Domestic Policy Council (DPC) in 1997. She later moved to the Office of the Vice President as the Senior Health Care advisor to Al Gore. She moved back to the DPC in early 1999 as an Associate Director of Domestic Policy. This collection consists of faxes, memoranda, correspondence, news clippings from print and electronic sources, policy papers, and reports from private policy experts, and executive office staff covering topics such as children’s healthcare, prescription drug coverage, expanding Medicare and Medicaid coverage, the Patients’ Bill of Rights, women’s health issues, mental health issues and food safety initiatives.

Scope and Content Note

Sarah Bianchi first served in the Clinton Administration as Assistant Director for Health Policy in the Office of Policy Development, Domestic Policy Council (DPC) in 1997, before moving to the Office of the Vice President as the Senior Health Care advisor to Al Gore. She moved back to the DPC in early 1999 as an Associate Director of Domestic Policy, and then in 2000 she became an advisor on domestic policy for the Gore-Lieberman campaign. In 2011, she returned to the White House as Deputy Assistant to the President, and as the Director of Economic and Domestic Policy for Vice President Joe Biden. A native of Atlanta Georgia, Bianchi is a graduate of Harvard University. The Sarah Bianchi collection include faxes, memorandums, correspondence, news clippings from print and electronic sources, policy papers, and reports from private policy experts, executive office staff and legislative staffers covering topics such as children’s healthcare, prescription drug coverage, expanding Medicare and Medicaid coverage, the Patients’ Bill of Rights, women’s health issues, mental health issues and food safety initiatives.
