Biographical Note

Philip J. “P.J.” Crowley served as Special Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs and Senior Director of Public Affairs for the National Security Council from 1997-1999. Crowley, a twenty-six year veteran of the United States Air Force, left the Clinton Administration in 1999 to work with NATO Secretary General Javier Solana. He retired from the Air Force in September of that year at the rank of Colonel. After leaving the military, Crowley worked as Vice President of the Insurance Information Institute specializing in the impact of terrorism on insurance in the wake of the September 11 attacks and then as the Director of National Defense and Homeland Security for the Center for American Progress. In 2009, President Barack Obama nominated Crowley to be the Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs. Crowley resigned from his position on March 13, 2011 following comments he made criticizing the treatment of Bradley Manning, the U.S. soldier suspected of providing WikiLeaks with classified diplomatic cables. Crowley is currently serving as the 2011-2012 General Omar N. Bradley Chair in Strategic Leadership, a position aimed at advancing the study of leadership and enhancing civilian-military dialogue at the United States Army War College, Dickinson College in Pennsylvania and Penn State Law.
