SCourt says drug dealers with guns in car can get extra prison time
WASHINGTON (AP) A federal law adding five years to the prison sentencé of anyone who carries a gun while selling or buying illegal drugs can apply to those who keep a gun locked in a car's glove compartment or trunk, the Supreme Court ruled Monday.

The 5-4 decision made the law a more potent weapon in Congress's war on drugs, and could affect thousands of federal cases each year. Federal appeals courts had disagreed on what Congress had in mind when it passed the somewhat ambiguously worded law.

Drug traffickers arrested while in or near their cars can be convicted of carrying a gun even if it is not immediately accessible, the justices ruled in a pair of cases from rural Louisiana and Boston.

"The generally accepted contemporary meaning of the word
'carry' includes the carrying of a firearm in a vehicle," Justice Stephen G. Breyer wrote for the court.

Defense lawyers decried the ruling. Gerald Lefcourt, president of the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers, said the decision "ignores the plain language of the statute, the clear intention of Congress and the multitude of laws already available to punish drug dealers."

He predicted the law would serve no purpose "other than to add to our already overflowing prisons."

In other matters Monday, the court:

Heard arguments over Whitewater independent counsel Kenneth Starr's efforts to obtain the notes of a meeting between presidential aide Vincent Foster and his lawyer nine days before Foster's 1993 suicide.

Ruled in a Nebraska case that jurors in capital punishment cases do not always have to be given the option of finding a defendant guilty of a lesser crime, one that does not carry a death sentence.

Told New Mexico's highest court it was wrong in blocking the extradition to Ohio of an American Indian activist who faces charges of violating parole and whom the New Mexico court called

``a refugee from injustice.''

Agreed to use a Kentucky case to clarify when hospitals can be forced to pay monetary damages for ``dumping,' ' or moving to other facilities some patients needing emergency care.

Said it will decide in an environmental dispute from Pennsylvania whether private citizens can sue over government agency regulations that allegedly result in racial discrimination.

In the gun-carrying decision, the court interpreted a federal law that adds five years to the prison term of anyone who ``uses or carries' ' a gun ``during and in relation to' ' a drug-trafficking crime.

Frank Muscarello got the extra five years for carrying a gun when arrested in Tangipahoa Parish, La., in 1994 while distributing marijuana from his car. He had a loaded pistol in the car's locked glove compartment.

Cocaine traffickers Donald Cleveland and Enrique Gray-Santana also were hit with the extra five years after their convictions in Boston. When arrested, they had three loaded pistols inside a duffel bag locked in the trunk of their rental car.

In an unanimous 1995 decision, the Supreme Court said Prosecutors cannot invoke the ``use' ' facet of the law unless they show ``active employment of the firearm.' ' Just having a gun nearby in case of a confrontation is not enough to be in violation of the use provision, the justices ruled then.

But Breyer's opinion for the court said someone does ``carry' ' a gun when transporting it in his or her car.

Breyer was joined by Justices John Paul Stevens, Sandra Day O'Connor, Anthony M. Kennedy and Clarence Thomas.

Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Ruth Bader Ginsburg, Antonin Scalia and David H. Souter dissented. Writing for the four, Ginsburg said the court ``should leave it to Congress to speak in language that is clear and definite if the Legislature wishes to impose the sterner penalty.''

The voting alignment was unusual. Stevens has earned a reputation as the justice most sensitive to the rights of criminal suspects, while Rehnquist and Scalia are viewed as tough law-and-order jurists.

DOL is getting close to releasing California's Welfare to Work formula grant. Given the size ($190 M) and importance of the state, DOL wanted to see if there was any White House interest in being involved in the announcement. On the other 17 states approved so far, DOL has issued a press release and made calls to key congressional members and state/local electeds. The release on TN included a quote from the VP. POTUS will be in CA next Friday for Oceans event. Lee Anne, is VP interested? If anyone thinks we should do something, we need to let Lynn Jennings at DOL know soon (219-8271).

We should think about doing a food safety radio address over the next month saying:

1. Food Safety Budget. Congress is marking up the budget this month (subcomms this week, full committees likely the week after, full bill on the floor after that) and rumors are the subcommittees are going to fund us at less than the $101 million Administration proposal, some rumors are at half the request. We need the whole amount -- in particular it funds our imported food safety policy.
2. Summer is the most dangerous time for food safety, (there was a recent salmonella outbreak in children's cereal), Congress should act now.
3. Also, we could consider pushing for our bill to give more teeth to USDA so it can order the recall of tainted foods and fine companies that don't comply with food safety regs. The bill is languishing. Congress should act now, before another tragedy.

SCourt says drug dealers with guns in car can get extra prison time
WASHINGTON (AP) A federal law adding five years to the prison sentence of anyone who carries a gun while selling or buying illegal drugs can apply to those who keep a gun locked in a car's glove compartment or trunk, the Supreme Court ruled Monday.

The 5-4 decision made the law a more potent weapon in Congress' war on drugs, and could affect thousands of federal cases each year. Federal appeals courts had disagreed on what Congress had in mind when it passed the somewhat ambiguously worded law.

Drug traffickers arrested while in or near their cars can be convicted of carrying a gun even if it is not immediately accessible, the justices ruled in a pair of cases from rural Louisiana and Boston.

"The generally accepted contemporary meaning of the word 'carry' includes the carrying of a firearm in a vehicle," Justice Stephen G. Breyer wrote for the court.

President Clinton praised the ruling, saying that despite falling crime rates, "guns and drugs remain serious problems among our youth and in many of our neighborhoods. Today's decision is one more victory for law enforcement and law-abiding citizens in the fight against crime and drugs."

Defense lawyers decried the ruling. Gerald Lefcourt, president of the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers, said the decision "ignores the plain language of the statute, the clear intention of Congress and the multitude of laws already available to punish drug dealers."

He predicted the law would serve no purpose "other than to add to our already overflowing prisons."

In other matters Monday, the court:

Heard arguments over Whitewater independent counsel Kenneth Starr's efforts to obtain the notes of a meeting between presidential aide Vincent Foster and his lawyer nine days before Foster's 1993 suicide.

Ruled in a Nebraska case that jurors in capital punishment cases do not always have to be given the option of finding a defendant guilty of a lesser crime, one that does not carry a death sentence.

Told New Mexico's highest court it was wrong in blocking the extradition to Ohio of an American Indian activist who faces charges of violating parole and whom the New Mexico court called "a refugee from injustice."

Agreed to use a Kentucky case to clarify when hospitals can be forced to pay monetary damages for "dumping," or moving to other facilities some patients needing emergency care.

Said it will decide in an environmental dispute from Pennsylvania whether private citizens can sue over government agency regulations that allegedly result in racial discrimination.

In the gun-carrying decision, the court interpreted a federal law that adds five years to the prison term of anyone who "uses or carries" a gun "during and in relation to" a drug-trafficking crime.

Frank Muscarello got the extra five years for carrying a gun when arrested in Tangipahoa Parish, La., in 1994 while distributing marijuana from his car. He had a loaded pistol in the car's locked glove compartment.

Cocaine traffickers Donald Cleveland and Enrique Gray-Santana also were hit with the extra five years after their convictions in Boston. When arrested, they had three loaded pistols inside a duffel bag locked in the trunk of their rental car.

In an unanimous 1995 decision, the Supreme Court said Prosecutors cannot invoke the "use" facet of the law unless they show "active employment of the firearm." Just having a gun nearby in case of a confrontation is not enough to be in violation of the use provision, the justices ruled then.

But Breyer's opinion for the court said someone does "carry" a gun when transporting it in his or her car.

Breyer was joined by Justices John Paul Stevens, Sandra Day O'Connor, Anthony M. Kennedy and Clarence Thomas.

Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Ruth Bader Ginsburg, Antonin Scalia and David H. Souter dissented. Writing for the four, Ginsburg said the court "should leave it to Congress to speak in language that is clear and definite if the Legislature wishes to impose the sterner penalty."

The voting alignment was unusual. Stevens has earned a reputation as the justice most sensitive to the rights of criminal suspects, while Rehnquist and Scalia are viewed as tough law-and-order jurists.

National Rifle Association
Question and Answer
June 9, 1998

Q. Mr. President, this weekend the National Rifle Association elected Charlton Heston as their new President. He said that instead of passing new gun laws, the Administration and Congress should focus on enforcing those laws already on the books. Furthermore, he challenged the federal government to focus its efforts on a single city -- with tough enforcement of the laws -- to see what a difference that can make. What is your reaction to his election and your response to his challenge?

A. I wish Mr. Heston the best of luck in his new job as President of the NRA, and I hope we can work with him to support tough, smart crime policies that keep driving down the crime rate. But as for focusing on one city for a single year, that is not a realistic option

This Administration has worked hand-in-hand with local law enforcement in thousands of cities for almost six years now -- and our efforts are making a difference. Murders are down more than 25%, violent crime is down more than 15%, and overall crime is at its lowest level in a generation. If Mr. Heston and the NRA want to help, I suggest they support tougher punishments, more police and better prevention in all of these communities.

But I will agree that tough enforcement and more prosecutions are part of the answer. So I Hope Mr. Heston and the NRA will consider supporting our proposals to hire more prosecutors and law enforcement officers at all levels of government -- especially local prosecutors and police officers. The NRA likes to say it is for more law enforcement and tough punishments, but they led the fight against the 1994 Crime Act that has provided billions of dollars for law enforcement and included some of the toughest penalties ever.
