Work Participation Rates

Question: Why are so many states not meeting the work rates? Does that mean welfare reform is a failure?

Answer: It's important to keep in perspective that 93 percent of the welfare caseload is made up of single parent families and nearly all states expect to meet the work rates for those families. The law requires 25 percent of the total welfare caseload to work and 75 percent of the two parent families to work. We think these work rules are tough but fair and states with serious welfare reform efforts should be able to meet them. After all, in these families one parent can work while the other takes care of the children.

Question: How many states do you expect to fail the work rates?

Answer: We are not sure. States have until mid-November to report data. Informally, most states have told us they will meet the overall 25 percent work rate, but many have reported concerns about meeting the 75 percent two parent rate. As you may know, the Associated Press surveyed states and found 19 states expect to fail the two parent work rates and seven states do not know. However, because of the staggered start dates for state TANF plans, only two-thirds of states have to report data and are subject to financial penalties this fiscal year, and none of these states will be reporting more than three months of data (from July 1- September 30th).

Question: Will the Administration penalize states that fail the work rates?

Answer: We will impose penalties on states that do not meet work rates. We believe it is critical that states place a priority on putting welfare families to work. The law does provide states with the opportunity to receive a credit toward the work rates for those who leave the welfare rolls and allows them to propose a corrective compliance plan in lieu of a penalty. We will evaluate these requests on a case by case basis.

Question: Is the Administration going to weaken the two parent work rate through regulations, as The New York Times reported this morning?

Answer: The welfare law explicitly says that states shall receive a "pro rata reduction of the participation rate due to caseload reductions" and provides a formula for reducing the work rates from, for example, 75 to 50 percent, if the state has had a 25 percent caseload reduction. Thus it is the law, not the regulation, which provides the caseload credit.

[Background: the issue raised in The New York Times this morning is whether the regulation will give states the choice of using the percentage reduction in two parent families or the percentage reduction in all families when subtracting the credit from the 75 percent two-parent work rate.]

Question: What will the penalties be?

Answer: States will be penalized 5 percent of their TANF block grant for the period in question (in this case, one to three months). For each consecutive year of failure, the penalty will increase.

Question: What data will be available today?

Answer: Actually, we don't have any data to release today because states have until mid-ovember to report work participation data to HHS for the fiscal year ending September 30th. Also, because of the staggered start dates for state TANF plans, only 34 states have to report data this fiscal year, and none of these states will be reporting more than three months of data (from July 1- September 30th).

Child Support Computer Systems

Question: Haven't a lot of states failed to meet the October 1st deadline for having state-wide child support computer systems in place? What is the Administration planning to do about this?

Answer: States have had nine years to develop these computer systems, and we don't intend to extend the deadline any further. We do, however, believe that the current law -- which requires us to withhold all federal child support funds -- will undermine efforts to collect child support for need families. Thus, while we proceed with the penalty process, we intend to accept the invitation from members of Congress such as Chairman Shaw to try to work together to devise an additional penalty structure.

Automated Records Management System
Hex-Dump Conversion

Question: Doesn't the states failure to put in place these computer systems show that these computer systems will never work?

Answer: To the contrary -- the increasing computerization of the child support enforcement has been one of the key reasons child support collections have increased by 50 percent over the past four years. Computers enable us to find and withhold child support from paycheck and bank accounts automatically. The National Directory of New Hires, which will go on line today, will enable us to find parents working in another state from their children.

Question: What exactly is the National Directory of New Hires?

Answer: Whenever a new employee is hired, employers will report six types of data -- employee name, addresss, Social Security number and employer names, address, and federal employer identification number -- to a state new hire database. Each of the fifty states will then report that data to the National Directory of New Hires, where it will be matched against records of parents who owe child support to locate and begin collection procedures against them.

Question: Which states will not have met this computer systems deadline?

Answer: The Department of Health and Human Services believes that 17 states and the District of Columbia will not meet the deadline. These states are: California, Michigan, Illinois, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Nevada, South Carolina, New Mexico, Alaska, Maryland, Indiana, Hawaii, Massachusetts, North Dakota, South Dakota, Oregon, and Missouri.

Q&A for Presidential Initiative to Improve the Safety of Imported Fruits and Vegetables
October 2, 1997

Q: What is the President proposing?

A: The President is proposing two legislative and [two] executive actions that will further improve the safety of fresh fruits and vegetables especially those imported into the U.S. First, the legislation will authorize the FDA to halt imports of fruits, vegetables, or other food from any foreign country whose food safety systems and standards are not on par with those of the U.S. Second, the President will also provide the necessary funds in his FY99 budget to enable FDA to expand dramatically its international inspection force so that it can make good use of this new authority, and to accelerate research to improve our knowledge of disease-causing pathogens on food.

Third, the President has asked the Secretaries of Health and Human Services and Agriculture to take additional steps to improve the safety of both imported and domestic fruits and vegetables. Specifically, he has asked the Secretaries to issue within one year guidance on good agricultural practices and good manufacturing practices for fruits and vegetables. [By providing the first-ever specific safety standards for fruits and vegetables,] the guidance will improve the agricultural and manufacturing practices of all those, foreign and domestic, seeking to sell produce in the U.S. market.

[Finally, the President has also asked the two Secretaries for a plan on how to improve the use of existing and projected resources to monitor agricultural and manufacturing practices abroad, assist foreign countries to improve those practices, and prevent the importation of unsafe produce, including by detecting unsafe food at the dock or border. The plan is due in 90 days.]

These efforts all build on the Clinton Administration's long-term commitment to strengthening our food safety system. With the help of the Vice-President's National Performance Review, we have fundamentally improved the way we ensure the safety of meat, poultry, and seafood. We have also put in place important new protections against the risks of pesticides in our food, especially for our children. And we are hopeful Congress will provide the $43 million the President requested in his FY98 budget to improve food safety.

Q: Why is he proposing these actions?

A: There have been dramatic changes in the produce department of the grocery store. Thirty years ago, most produce sections only had around a dozen items year round and that would increase to as many as 50 in the summer. Today, no matter where you live in the United States, the chances are there are 400 or more items in the produce section and they are there all year round. Last year, 38 percent of the fruit and 12 percent of the vegetables Americans ate were imported. [USDA is sending baseline data]

We have changed as well. Americans are eating more fresh fruits and vegetables than ever before, and our nation's health experts tell us we will live longer, better quality lives as a result. Our environment is also changing. We are finding "new" exotic bugs such as cyclospora and E. coli O157:H7 on our food that once were not there.

When you add up all these changes, and ask the question: is raw produce more risky to eat, the experts have told us they don't think so. The increase in the amount of produce and the types of produce we consume is far greater than the illnesses that may have resulted. But the experts have also made suggestions on ways to further improve the safety of raw produce, and the steps we are announcing today follow their advice.

Q: Why has the Administration waited until now to take these steps?

A: We are taking these steps now because they are the natural next steps in the President's long-term efforts to ensure the safety of the nation's food supply.

One of the first challenges we faced after taking office in 1993 was an outbreak of E. coli in hamburger in the northwest. We recommended replacing our old system of responding to problems only after they occur with a new system to prevent problems before they occur. That system, which we are putting in place for meat, poultry, and seafood is greatly increasing our ability to make sure food is safe.

In 1995, FDA established the Fresh Produce Subcommittee of the National Advisory Committee on Microbial Criteria for Food. The subcommittee has been defining the problem of pathogens in fresh produce and devising appropriate preventive and control measures.

In January, we announced several additional steps to improve the safety of our food. The President asked Congress to add $43 million to our food safety budget to fund a nationwide early-warning system for foodborne illness, increase seafood safety inspections, and expand food-safety research, training, and education. We are hopeful Congress will provide the funds we requested and beginning next month we will be using that money to further reduce the incidence of foodborne illness.

This new initiative is the natural next step. With significant measures already taken to ensure the safety of meat, poultry, and seafood, we are now directing our efforts to the produce consumed by Americans.

Q: Given the dramatic increase of food imported into the U.S., and the seemingly related increases in outbreaks in foodborne disease, shouldn't the Administration be taking more immediate steps to protect Americans from unsafe foreign food?

Automated Records Management System
Hex-Dump Conversion

A: First, it is important to remember that the experts in food safety have not concluded that there is an increase in outbreaks of foodborne illness in the U.S. that is the result of imported food.

Even though our food supply is among the safest in the world, each year there are still millions of Americans who get sick from the food they eat. The overwhelming majority of these cases are what is known as sporadic illnesses. These illnesses are isolated cases and are not caused by a single, specific contaminated food. An "outbreak" of foodborne disease is typically when many people become sick from being exposed to the same source of contaminated food.

As a result of steps we have taken over the last four years, we are doing a more thorough job looking for outbreaks than we have ever done before. Experts we have consulted say that our improved surveillance is one of the primary reasons we are hearing about more food-related illnesses. We are catching and quickly responding to outbreaks of foodborne illness that we often missed in the past.

Second, the steps we are taking today are on top of other actions the Administration has already taken. For example, next week we will complete work on the first generation of an FDA automated import system known as OASIS (Operational and Administrative System for Import Support). OASIS ties together electronically 435 ports of entry around the U.S. and dramatically increases the efficiency of FDA inspection efforts. In the past, some importers engaged in what was known as "port-shopping" taking potentially harmful products through the busiest ports where their products would receive the least scrutiny. OASIS was designed to end that practice.

Q: How will the new guidance that you have asked the Secretaries to develop make our food safer?

A: Today the produce industry is required to produce safe food, but there is not agreement on how to do so. That is like telling drivers in a big city to drive carefully without providing them road signs or traffic lights. Under our new plan government food safety agencies will work with industry to develop the industry specific guidance that will alert them to the potential hazards and the hazard-reducing steps they should take to produce safe food. For example, FDA will issue guidance on good agricultural practices to minimize the risk of microbial contamination. This guidance will address, among other things, standards for worker and field sanitation, the proper and safe uses of water, and manure application.

Q: Does FDA have the authority to prevent the entry of foods that are contaminated?

A: FDA has authority to refuse the importation of foods that appear to be adulterated. However, FDA does not examine every entry of food. With new legislation, FDA could declare foods from a country to be adulterated if that country's food system does not provide the same level of protection that is provided for domestic products. USDA already has comparable authority for meat and poultry products.

Automated Records Management System

Q: Are the steps you are taking today sufficient to ensure the safety of imported produce?

A: We are committed to ensuring that the food that we eat is safe. It is important to keep in mind that there are no data to indicate that there is more of a problem with imported fruits and vegetables compared to domestic products. However, some outbreaks have been traced back to imports, and health officials want to improve the safety of imported fruits and vegetables, as well as domestic products. The steps we are taking today are adding additional layers of protection to a food supply that is already among the safest in the world. The steps we are announcing today represent the best ideas of our experts in government and the experts outside government in both industry and public health.

Q: Why didn't you address this problem in the President's food safety initiative announced in May or in the budget the President introduced last January?

A: The food safety initiative did identify both imports and raw produce as areas of concern. In fact, in the food safety report to the a President that was issued in May that accompanies his budget request, we proposed specific steps to further improve the safety of fruits and vegetables and imported foods. The additional measures we are putting in place build on our plan.

Q: Since HACCP has been successful for meat, poultry, and seafood, why don't you require HACCP for fresh fruits and vegetables?

A: HACCP is a science-based approach for identifying and controlling hazards in food production. We need better scientific data before we can develop HACCP for fresh fruits and vegetables. The Administration's plan is to develop and issue guidance that will help companies interpret existing safety requirements for fruits and vegetables, and that will lead to the science needed for HACCP. The agency is contemplating guidance on basic, common-sense sanitation and employee practices in the form of Good Agricultural Practices (GAPs) for farms and Good Manufacturing Practices (GMPs) applicable for those who sort, wash, and otherwise handle fresh fruits and vegetables.

Q: Would country of origin labeling be an effective way to help consumers protect themselves?

A: No. Country of origin labeling is not an effective food safety control measure. Imports are not all unsafe, any more than all domestic products are safe, so the consumer cannot infer safety or lack of safety from product origin.

I have a long-standing request for Bruce to return a phone call to Gov. Thompson (R-WI) regarding our position on FLSA and workfare. The Governor called the President on August 4. At that time we determined not to have the President return the call but rather to refer it to Erskine or Sr. Staff. We have determined that the Thompson staff would consider a call from Bruce as adequate to close the loop. Given our position on FICA and FUTA taxes this will provide an opportunity for us to convey our message clearly. We can not depend on others to do so.

Please let me know if you are willing to fulfill this request and if you need any more information from us to help. Emily is out until Monday. I am hoping this could be accomplished this week. Thanks.

PRESIDENT WILLIAM J. CLINTON
VIDEO MESSAGE TO THE AMERICAN

COUNCIL ON EDUCATION, s

EDUCATING ONE THIRD OF A NATION'S CONFERENCE

16-18, 1997

Hello. I've enjoyed speaking to the American Council on Education at your national conference year after year and wish I could be with all of you again in Miami. I am pleased to know that the Administration is well represented at the conference by Judith Winston, the Executive Director of One America in the 21st Century, the President's Initiative on Race, as well as Dr. John Hope Franklin, Governor William Winters and Rev. Suzan Johnson Cook of the Race Advisory Board. Thank you to ACE for focusing on an issue I believe to be the most challenging and pressing that we face as a nation.

Equal opportunity is our central value, but the very meaning of that has fundamentally changed. For example, in the 19th century, opportunity meant access to a land grant. In the 21st century, it will mean access to a Pell Grant to a community college, to a trade school, to] or a university. It is my strongest conviction that we must work together to open the doors of college even wider. At a time when a college education means stability, a good job, a passport to the middle class, we must make at least two years of college as universal at the dawn of the next century as a high school diploma is today.

And here we are making great progress. Our balanced budget includes the largest increase in aid to education since 1965 and the biggest increase in higher education since the G.I. Bill 50 years ago. By increasing Pell Grants and creating the HOPE Scholarship and Lifetime Learning tuition tax credits, we are eliminating the financial obstacles that have barred many of our citizens from pursuing post-secondary education. We can proudly say for the first time in history that college is available for all Americans who are willing to work for it. I want to thank ACE for its hard work in helping make this achievement possible.

But, we know we have much more work to do. We know that many other obstacles still exist, those which prohibit our children from making the most of their God-given potential. For the first time since the 1950s, our schools in America are resegregating. There are still too many places where opportunity for education and work are not equal, where disintegration of families and neighborhoods make it more difficult to plan for a college career. The recent rollback of affirmative action is slamming shut the doors of higher education on a new generation. [Earlier draft had a sentence on how diversity benefits all Americans, but was taken out due to space constraints. Do you think it's critical to hit that note?]

We must not give in to those who have given up on the idea of integration and the search for common ground. Despite the recent setback in the courts, I hope that all of you will come away from this conference emboldened by the need to preserve and protect appropriate affirmative action on your campuses. [Should we say protect diversity AND affirmative action here, or is affirmative action ok by itself? I have recommended that we use "appropriate affirmative action" because of feedback from counsel's office on recent Q&A]. As we work open a national dialogue on matters of race, colleges and universities can and should play a central role in that effort. I urge all of you to search for ways in which your institution can contribute. Thank you and God Bless.

PRESIDENT WILLIAM J. CLINTON
REMARKS ON FOOD SAFETY REGULATIONS
OVAL OFFICE
OCTOBER 2, 1997

At the beginning of this century, our government made a fundamental promise to our people: We committed ourselves to making sure that the world's most bountiful food supply would always be the world's safest. And from the day I took office five years ago, I have worked very hard not only to honor this promise and but to make our food supply even safer.

We have put in place new rigorous safety standards for meat, poultry, and seafood products, throwing out archaic and ineffective inspection methods that had been left untouched for nearly a century. We have begun requiring slaughterhouses to test for deadly E. Coli and salmonella bacteria before shipping their products to our stores. We have begun developing new safety standards for fruit and vegetable juices. We have brought a host of federal agencies together to boost food safety research, education, and food contamination surveillance efforts across the country. And in doing so, we are using the world's best science to prevent contamination tragedies before they happen, to make sure that our food supply is the safest it can be.

Today, our food supply remains the world's safest. But we know we cannot rest on our accomplishments. We must do more. We must make sure that increased trade never diminishes the safety of our food. Today, I want to tell you the new steps we are taking to ensure that our fruits and vegetables -- including those imported from other countries -- meet the highest health and safety standards.

First, I am asking Congress to give our Food and Drug Administration the power to ban the importation of fruits, vegetables and other foods from countries whose food safety precautions do not meet American standards. This new law would be very similar to the USDA's current policy of keeping meats and poultry from countries with unacceptable food safety systems out of our stores. Also, in my next budget, I will provide extra funding to strengthen the FDA's international food inspection force.

With these efforts, we can make sure that no fruits and vegetables cross our borders, enter our ports or reach our dinner tables without meeting the same, strict safety standards as those grown in America. Our food safety system is the strongest in the world. And that's how it's going to stay.

I am also directing the Secretary of Health and Human Services, the Department of Agriculture to work together, in close cooperation with the agricultural community to develop rigorous safety standards for growing, processing, shipping and selling fruits and vegetables. The standards should address such as aspects as sanitation, worker health, water use, problems in the distribution and marketing system, regional and crop variations.

I am asking Secretaries Shalala and Glickman to report back to me within 90 days with a complete schedule for developing these standards within a year, as well as a comprehensive plan to improve the monitoring of food safety systems abroad, help foreign countries upgrade their safety precautions, and toughen food inspections at the border.

Automated Records Management System

Being a parents is perhaps the toughest job in the world. Our parents deserve the peace of mind that comes from knowing that the food they set before their children will nourish and strengthen their bodies, not make them sick. With today's new actions, we will help make their jobs that much easier.

TEXT:

I am looking for proposals\outlines from groups who want to sponsor satellite sites by Wednesday, October 8. These do not have to be in any specific format but we want them to include the location, groups they are working with, number expecting, etc. We will then be able to create a list of cities where sites are being planned, possibly link groups together and help these organizations build strong events. Coordinates will be provided for groups to downlink, therefore, these organizations will have to identify sites that have existing satellite capabilities or they will have to bring in a mobile downlink.

Please call me at x66614 or Laura Schwartz at x65655, if you have any questions. My fax number for the proposals is 456-6682 thanks.

Christine Stanek
