TEXT:

Today, Paul Virtue, the INS General Counsel is testifying before Rep. Lamar Smith's Subcommittee on Immigration. I will let you know if anything noteworthy comes up.

Generally, Smith plans to hold a hearing weekly on immigration issues. Next week, 3/11 Smith will hold a hearing on "Immigrant Quality". Smith is expected to argue that current immigrants are low-skilled and are adversely impacting minority communities in the US. This is an attempt by Smith to argue for changing our legal immigration system to admit immigrants with higher levels of education.

3/18 - Immigrant Smuggling and Overstays - INS will testify.

Please let me know if you have any questions.

Subject: Re: Note from IGA re: Senate Approps Plan TANF Cut

Message Creation Date was at 4-MAR-1999 09:14:00

Yes. There are also a variety of other objectionable cuts as well. But we better have some good reasons b/c we are going t be stuck in both Houses paying for Central Am, ag and Jordan and it totals $1.4 billion in 99 money...

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary

For Immediate Release

March 4, 1999

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT

Today's release of state-by-state National Assessment of Education Progress scores is evidence that our efforts to raise academic standards have begun to pay off. Many states have shown significant improvement in reading in the last four years, and some states that had scores well below the national average have made the greatest gains. But much remains to be done to ensure that every child in America is mastering the basics. That is why I urge the Senate to vote this week to continue funding for 100,000 new, well-prepared teachers to reduce class size in the early grades. Parents and teachers across the country know that smaller classes lead to improved student performance in reading and other basic skills. We should grasp this opportunity to build on the gains we have made, so that every child in America is prepared to meet the challenges of the 21st century.

Police Abuse and Misconduct
Policy Announcements

1. Increase funding for police integrity and ethics training. Currently, the federal government invests only a limited amount of funds on the issue of police integrity and ethics -- an issue that is central to community policing and the changing nature of policing in America. For instance, of the approximately 25 regional training centers funded by the Justice Department's COPS Office, only 2 specialize in this discipline. By increasing the percentage of funds in the President's COPS program that can be used for training, we can make police integrity and ethics a priority in all 25 of our regional training centers.

2. Develop early warning systems to detect abuse and misconduct. Studies show that many of the police officers who engage in serious misconduct and abuse tend to have had a disproportionate number of complaints filed against them. Local police departments can and should do much more to implement early warning systems that allow them to identify and discipline problem police officers -- before its too late. Funds should be authorized to help police departments put such systems into place.

3. Develop a national system to track serious misconduct and abuse. The federal government should establish a national database that tracks police officers who are found guilty of serious misconduct or abuse. State, local and federal law enforcement agencies could then consult this database as they screen new officers, helping to prevent against the re-hiring of abusive or corrupt police officers.

4. Enhance police recruitment of minorities. Former New York Police Commissioner William Bratton has recommended that police department diversify and improve their workforce by aggressively recruiting and educating minority candidates. He has proposed offering 12-to-14 year-olds summer jobs and training, establishing public safety high schools, and continuing to pay for the education of police cadets in the City College system. Our Police Corps and/or COPS program could be amended to support such long-term minority recruitment efforts.

5. Raise police force education levels. A fundamental reform in policing that is supported by both police management and labor is an overall increase in the education level of America's police. Our budget this year already includes $20 million for such scholarships.

6. Establish citizen police academies. In some cities, police departments offer a version of their police academy training to citizens and community advocates. The goal of this training is two-fold: (1) for police to better understand the concerns of its citizens; and (2) for citizens to better understand and experience the training received by police and how they make decisions, such as when to use deadly force. Our COPS program could help more communities to establish these citizen academies.

Automated Records Management System
Hex-Dump Conversion

7. Promote tough enforcement of our laws. Tough enforcement of our laws must be a central element of any plan against police misconduct and abuse. Our budget includes an increase of more than $1 million dollars (and 10 new attorneys) for this purpose -- the largest ever proposed.

8. Complete the transition to community policing. Any plan to reduce police abuse and misconduct must be coupled with a long-term commitment to affirmatively strengthen the bond between police and the people they serve. There is no better way to do this than to renew the President's COPS program, which has helped to sow the seeds of change in thousands of law enforcement agencies throughout the country. If the President's COPS program is not renewed this year, or replaced with a block grant, we will lose all the leverage we have gained over the past 5 years to promote changes in law enforcement at the local level.

seems like our mtg on police brutality, your policy process on the crime bill should result in a coordinated plan--But we also have the crime section of the Race book. You'll recall that Elena said that she would follow up by working out the policy options so we'd know what we'll be saying about racial profiling, police brutality--We are still working on trying to get this book done by April 1--I'd like your options to be developed sufficiently so that we could come to closure the week of March 15. That means not just incorporating the good ideas discussed today but also fully exploring whether an executive order on federal law enforcement could be done and just as importantly what do we say about the INS. Because I will be in Central America next week, I can't give this the attention it deserves and am counting on you all to complete this work and to include Edley and/or designee in this development process. I am scheduling the next racial profiling meeting for Monday, March 15. Please be ready to discuss the options then (paper beforehand would be much appreciated). Thanks.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

FROM Bruce Reed
Chuck Ruff

RE: Police Brutality

We wanted to update you on our discussions regarding Hugh Price's letter to you on the issue of police brutality. Chuck has personally followed up with Mr. Price, who believes -- along with many of the other civil rights advocates -- that you need to speak to this issue as soon as possible. Key White House and Justice Department staff share this sense of urgency, and we also generally agree that it is important for you to focus on the constructive steps the Administration has and will take to root out police brutality and strengthen the bond between police officers and the communities they serve. Accordingly, we recommend the following:

- (1) Use your next radio address to bring together a group of civil rights advocates, mayors, police chiefs, and rank-and-file law enforcement organizations;
- (2) Challenge these leaders to work with you to make sure that the criminal justice system serves the needs of all Americans, and to make the system both fairer and more effective;
- (3) Discuss new provisions to be included in your 21st Century Crime Bill that will help accomplish this -- such as more and better police training, early warning systems to detect problem police, better educated police forces, improved efforts to recruit minorities, and a long-term commitment to strengthen community policing efforts across the country; and
- (4) Direct the Attorney General to hold a series of meetings with all of these interested groups, and to recommend further action steps that the Administration can take.

Also, attached please find a brief description of some of the initial proposals you may want to consider supporting in such a radio address. Although these require further development -- and we have not yet consulted with any of the impacted groups -- we thought you might be interested in our initial recommendations.

Police Abuse and Misconduct
Policy Announcements

1. Increase funding for police integrity and ethics training. Currently, the federal government invests only a limited amount of funds to promote police integrity and to keep officers from turning to misconduct or abuse. With community policing helping to decentralize the management of police, this training becomes increasingly important. However, of the approximately 25 regional training centers funded by the Justice Department's COPS Office, only 2 specialize in this important area. By increasing the percentage of funds in the COPS program that can be used for training, we can make police integrity and ethics the priority it should be in all 25 of the federally-funded regional training centers.

2. Develop early warning systems to detect abuse and misconduct. Studies show that many of the police officers who engage in serious misconduct and abuse tend to be the source of a disproportionate number of complaints. Local police departments can and should do more to implement early warning systems that allow them to identify and discipline problem police officers sooner. Funds could be authorized to help police departments put such early warning systems into place.

3. Develop a national system to track serious misconduct and abuse. The federal government could establish a national database that tracks police officers who are found guilty of serious misconduct or abuse. State, local and federal law enforcement agencies would then be required to consult this database when screening prospective recruits. Such a database would help ensure that rogue cops who are disciplined or let go in one jurisdiction are not simply re-employed by another law enforcement agency.

4. Enhance police recruitment of minorities. Former New York Police Commissioner William Bratton has recommended that police department diversify and improve their workforce by aggressively recruiting and educating minority candidates. He has proposed offering 12-to-14 year-olds summer jobs and training, establishing public safety high schools, and continuing to pay for the education of police cadets in the City College system. The Police Corps and/or COPS program could easily be amended to support such long-term minority recruitment efforts.

5. Raise police force education levels. A fundamental reform in policing that is supported by both police management and labor is an overall increase in the education level of America's police. Our budget this year already includes $20 million for such scholarships.

6. Establish citizen police academies. In some cities, police departments offer a version of their police academy training to citizens and community advocates. The goal of this training is two-fold: (1) for police department to better understand the concerns of its citizens; and (2) for citizens to better understand how police make important decisions, such as when and how to use force, when to stop a motorist, etc. Support for such academies could be specifically authorized by the COPS program.

7. Promote tough enforcement of our laws. Tough enforcement of our civil rights laws must be a central element of any plan against police misconduct and abuse. Our budget includes an increase of more than $1 million dollars (and 10 new attorneys) just for this purpose.

8. Complete the transition to community policing. Over the long term, the most important thing we can do to affirmatively strengthen the bond between police and the people they serve is to renew the COPS program, which has helped to sow the seeds of change in thousands of law enforcement agencies throughout the country. If COPS is not renewed this year, or if it is replaced with a block grant, the federal government will lose the leverage it has gained over the past 5 years in helping to promote changes in law enforcement at the local level.

Police Misconduct and Abuse Q&A
March 2, 1999

Q: The Diallo case in New York has raised the issue of police abuse and misconduct across the country. Last week, a number of civil rights groups including the Urban League held a press conference on the issue. What do you intend to do about this matter?

A: With respect to the Diallo case in particular, as the Attorney General said last week, the Department of Justice's Civil Rights Division, the local U.S. Attorney's Office, and the FBI are working with the local prosecutor and local authorities to ensure that every possible step is taken in this case.

As to the larger issue of police brutality, the criminal justice system must be fair and have the support of all law-abiding Americans. I've asked the Attorney General to consider the thoughtful recommendations submitted by Mr. Price as she continues to work with state and local law enforcement agencies on these matters.

My Administration is committed to vigorous enforcement of our civil rights laws against those police officers who would betray the public's trust through lawlessness or brutality.

Our record shows that. Since 1993, the Justice Department has criminally prosecuted over 300 officers, resulting in more than 200 convictions. And our budget for next year includes a 15 percent increase for civil rights enforcement across the board, and an even more substantial increase for the Civil Rights Division of the Justice Department, which has responsibility for much of the work involving police misconduct.

We must also work proactively to ensure that the criminal justice system serves the public safety needs of all Americans. The Justice Department is actively working with law enforcement organizations across the country to develop training programs to address issues of misconduct and abuse. And our community policing initiative has been instrumental in strengthening the bond between community residents and their local police, as well as reducing the victimization of minorities. Building this kind of trust is essential if we are to move forward to make our criminal justice system more responsive and fairer for all of our citizens.

Subject: Tobacco Hearing

Senate Finance just called to invited Lew to testify before the Full Committee on March 10 re: tobacco recoupment. Also testifying would be Nancy Ann Min, Dan Crippen (CBO), and 2 state AGs. Lew does not think he has much of a choice but to testify. He wanted to make sure that you concurred.

TEXT:

Education thinks they will have the local allocations for class size done by tomorrow morning (Friday) . Julie Green is strongly recommending that Sec Riley go ahead and release those at his press conference on Friday. Also, the groups would like to get them on Friday so that they can get them to their local offices. ED wanted to check in with the WH on the release. Are you ok with Education releasing those numbers when they are ready on Friday - or do you want to hold off until Sat's radio address?

In the current radio address draft, we don't specifically reference the release of the local allocation data -- but focus on the guidelines (which will tell communities how much money they will receive and how they can spend it).
