TEXT:

The Weekly Tobacco Strategy Meeting is scheduled for today, June 18, at 2:45 in Room 211 OEOB.

June 18, 1998

TO: Poverty Measurement Working Group

FROM: Rebecca Blank

Because I thought there were still some misunderstandings in our meeting last Tuesday, I want to provide a little background information and make a suggestion about how OMB should proceed as it puts together some simulations of program effects.

Let me start with two comments that I believe might need clarifying:

(1) The primary way in which changes in the poverty measurement will affect program spending is through changes in the Guidelines, the simplified poverty thresholds published by HHS. In fact, most programs (and ALL the big programs) that are tied in any way to poverty measurement are tied to the Guidelines. Since the Guidelines are NOT the same as the poverty thresholds used by Census to calculate the actual poverty rate, but are tabulated by HHS and include a variety of changes to those thresholds, it is impossible to simulate the program effects of a change in poverty measurement without making some assumptions about what sort of Guidelines HHS would issue under an alternative measure of poverty.

(2) There is no consistency across programs in how family income and eligibility is calculated. In fact, it's quite amazing how very inconsistent even quite similar programs are. Programs have dealt with the fact that they care about different income levels and concepts in part by using different multiples of the poverty guidelines as part of their eligibility determination -- some programs use 100%, some use 135%, some use 185%, etc. This means that conceptually it really doesn't matter what the guidelines are because programs can always use whatever multiple they find most convenient. Of course, in the real world, programs have specifically enacted legislation that commits them to (say) setting the upper level of eligibility at households whose countable income for that specific program is below 135% of the Guidelines. These specific program rules are hard to change in the short run.

However, most programs use a measure of family income that is much closer to "cash income" than to the "full income" measure proposed by the NRC for an improved measure of poverty.

(3) Programs are currently designed to use the existing Guidelines which assume family income is defined as cash income. This suggests that at least one simulation we want to do is the following "What are the program effects of a change in the poverty measure, if we translate the alternative poverty thresholds (based on full income) into poverty thresholds that are closer to the cash income concept utilized by the programs and use this "cash equivalent threshold" to establish the Guidelines?" This essentially means recalculating the alternative thresholds to "back out" the concepts not included in cash income. Specifically, one would take the alternative thresholds (designed to be compared to "full income") and add back in average child care and work expenses, MOOP, and taxes and subtract off average in-kind benefits. This gives you the cash-equivalent threshold implied by the alternative threshold.

Now comes a key point that I felt wasn't understood in Tuesday's meeting: One of the Pros of utilizing a benchmarked poverty rate is that the cash equivalent value of the alternative thresholds under benchmarking must of necessity be very close to the current Guidelines. This is because of the way benchmarking works -- the thresholds are the residual calculation once you use a specific definition of family income and set an aggregate poverty rate. Essentially, the thresholds under benchmarking are the poverty line that, given a definition of "full income", results in the current poverty rate. If I were to ask "what is the cash equivalent to those thresholds that provides the same poverty rate?" this must result in an answer very closer to the current Guidelines since the current poverty line is a cash income threshold that results in the current poverty rate. There's no funny business here. It must be true mathematically that, if we say "We want the cash equivalent threshold implied by the alternative thresholds being used in our new measure of poverty" and if those thresholds are coming from a benchmarked alternative measure, then the cash equivalent thresholds will be very close to current poverty lines.

This suggests there are probably four program simulations that OMB wants to focus on:

1. Take the thresholds that result from a benchmarked alternative poverty measure and assume they are blindly turned into Guidelines and calculate the program effects absent any other program changes.
2. Take the thresholds that result from a benchmarked alternative poverty measure and assume they are translated into their cash equivalent values and these cash equivalent values are used to set the Guidelines (i.e., we try to produce Guidelines that reflect current program needs.)
3. Take the thresholds that result from a non-benchmarked alternative poverty measure (i.e., the 18% poverty rate calculated as the NRC alternative, or something close to it) and assume they are blindly turned into Guidelines and calculate the program effects absent any other program changes.
4. Take the thresholds that result from a non-benchmarked alternative poverty measure and assume they are translated into their cash equivalent values and these cash equivalent values are used to set the Guidelines (i.e., we try to produce Guidelines that reflect current program needs.)

Final note: Both procedures 2 and 3 are going to result in new Guidelines very close to the current Guidelines and hence lead to quite small program changes, even in the absence of any change in program rules or regulations. (This is true for procedure 3 only because -- quite by accident -- the "full-income" thresholds that result from the alternative NRC poverty calculation are very close to the current poverty line.) I think procedure 2 is much more defensible than procedure 3, but leaving arguments over the merit aside this does suggest that there are quite feasible calculations that are very conceptually defensible and that will result in only small program changes and may require no adjustments to the program rules. Without prejudging at all what our future recommendations might be, this is an important piece of information.

(All of this ignores changes in the composition of the poor that will result in changes in the distribution of benefits across groups regardless of how the Guidelines are defined -- This is obviously also a very important issue, but separable from the Guidelines issue discussed above.)

LEGISLATIVE REFERRAL MEMORANDUM

TO: Legislative Liaison Officer - See Distribution below

FROM: Janet R. Forsgren (for) Assistant Director for Legislative Reference

OMB CONTACT: Melissa N. Benton
PHONE: (202)395-7887 FAX: (202)395-6148

SUBJECT: REVISED HUD Report on S462, HR 2 Public Housing Reform and Responsibility Act of 1997

DEADLINE: COB Monday, June 22, 1998

In accordance with OMB Circular A-19, OMB requests the views of your agency on the above subject before advising on its relationship to the program of the President. Please advise us if this item will affect direct spending or receipts for purposes of the "Pay-As-You-Go" provisions of Title XIII of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990.

COMMENTS: To follow is a revised version of the HUD report on Public Housing Reform, redlined to show the changes that were made in response to comments received on the first draft.

We understand that significant portions of the public housing legislation will be attached to the House VA/HUD appropriations bill, which is scheduled to be marked up by the Appropriations Committee this Thursday. HUD would like to send its letter before Appropriations Committee action.

The deadline is firm.

HHS/ACF did background briefing this morning on the two reports referenced in release below. Michael Kharfen said it went well. Reporters attending were: Laura Meckler, AP; Judy Haveman, Post; Rich Wolf, USA Today; Ina Jaffe, NPR. Barry, I wouldn't think you'd get press questions, but if you want Q&As, let me know. We did a weekly item already on the MDRC study of Portland. I'll do one this week on Urban Institute 5-state study though it's primarily a snapshot, and not an impact evaluation.

REPORTS EXAMINE SUCCESSFUL WELFARE-TO-WORK EFFORTS

HHS Secretary Donna E. Shalala today released two reports that examine successful programs in five states and one city helping welfare recipients move into jobs.

"As states and localities develop their own welfare-to-work programs, they need to know how successful programs are achieving results," Secretary Shalala said. The efforts outlined in these reports are excellent examples of programs that work."

One of the studies, "Building an Employment Focused Welfare System," prepared by the Urban Institute, examines how welfare reform is being implemented by Indiana, Massachusetts, Oregon, Virginia and Wisconsin -- five states that have experienced caseload declines well above the national average.

The second report prepared by the Manpower Development Research Corporation, "Implementation, Participation Costs, and Two-Year Impacts of the Portland (Oregon) Welfare-to-Work Program," looks at Portland, Oregon's welfare-to-work program, which reduced welfare expenditures by 17 percent over a two-year period, while increasing recipients' earnings by 35 percent.

"I am encouraged that these programs report substantial numbers of welfare parents working, and significantly in jobs paying more than the minimum wage," said Olivia Golden, HHS Assistant Secretary for Children and Families. "Moving from welfare to work must mean opening new doors of opportunity for families."

The five-state study focuses specifically on experiences implementing "Work First," the philosophy that most welfare recipients are capable of obtaining employment, that any job is better than no job and that the best way to succeed in the labor market is to join it.

The five states studied in the Urban Institute report were already restructuring their welfare systems to emphasize work when Congress passed major federal welfare reform in 1996. That legislation eliminated traditional open-ended cash assistance provided by the Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) program and the Job Opportunities and Basic Skills Training (JOBS) program. Congress replaced these programs with the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families program, which provides block grants to individual states, and which requires work for welfare recipients.

"There has been a shift in welfare-to-work programs across the country, from relying on providing education and training as the major route to self-sufficiency, to programs which embrace a Work First philosophy," said Pamela A. Holcomb of the Urban Institute. "The point of this report is to show how states are accomplishing this shift."

Typical practices, the researchers report, included (1) making a job search the first and central activity, (2) limiting participation in education and training, (3) imposing stricter participation and work requirements, including greater use of unpaid work experience (4) enforcing stiffer penalties for noncompliance and (5) placing time limits on assistance.

While the Work First programs in all five states shared common features, each state combined elements to create its own unique version of welfare reform. For example:

ú Virginia provided recipients with the greatest opportunity to combine assistance with employment but also applied severe penalties for non-cooperation;

ú Both Virginia and Massachusetts imposed work requirements sooner than the other states and relied more extensively on community service programs to engage recipients in some form of work;

ú Oregon developed the most successful program for creating subsidized employment opportunities for welfare recipients.

By tracking a sample of recipients over a one year period, the five-state study found that 31-44 percent of the participants at the end of the year were still receiving cash assistance or back on welfare, with or without a job.

"The Portland results provide valuable lessons on how to not only get more people working, but also get them better jobs, and on how to succeed with those typically considered hard to place in jobs," said Gayle Hamilton of the MDRC. "The program emphasized getting a job quickly, but also used some education and training as tools to get there."

Portland, Oregon's efforts have been among the most effective among large-scale mandatory programs, according to the report prepared by the Manpower Demonstration Research Corporation. By the end of the study period, just 41 percent of program group members were receiving welfare, compared to 53 percent of control group members. The proportion of people working at full-time jobs increased by 13 percent, and the proportion with employer-provided health benefits increased by 10 percent.

The Portland program used a mixed-services strategy: most people participated in job search, but many also participated in short-term education, vocational training, work experience, and life skills training. Failure to participate resulted in welfare grant reductions.

One important feature of the Portland program is that it increased job quality. Participants were encouraged to look for and take "good" jobs--full-time jobs, paying more than the minimum wage, with benefits and potential for advancement.

The studies suggest that states will need to adopt a greater range and

mix of services and strategies to help the least employable welfare recipients, Assistant Secretary Golden said.

DRAFT MEMORANDUM FOR EOP PRINCIPALS MEETING

FROM: ???

SUBJECT: BENCHMARKING THE NRC-BASED INCOME AND POVERTY MEASURES

As discussed at the last EOP Principals meeting, in early 1999 the Census Bureau will publish an analysis of alternative measures of poverty based on the proposals contained in the 1995 National Research Council (NRC) report, Measuring Poverty: A New Approach. Because OMB is the statutory arbiter of the "official" poverty measurement methodology, the Census Bureau has asked for advice on the proposed alternative measures to be highlighted (among many that will be published as part of the analysis). Currently, the Census Bureau plans to benchmark all of its highlighted poverty estimates to a recent (likely 1997) poverty rate. (Note, however, that non-benchmarked estimates will appear in the analysis portion of the report.)

The purpose of this meeting is to decide whether we want to advise Census to highlight a few series that are not benchmarked, to advise that only benchmarked estimates be highlighted, or simply to remain silent on the issue (which will likely result in only benchmarked estimates being highlighted). This decision does not settle the issue of whether we should not benchmark the official poverty measure, but it would make selecting a non-benchmarked alternative more difficult.

In order to develop fully the issues involved, this memo has two parts. The first part explains the concept and presents the pros and cons of benchmarking. Much of this information was contained in the background memo for the last Principals meeting, however we include it here for ease of access. The second part outlines the potential implications of advising the Census Bureau to highlight some series that are not benchmarked.

Part I: Background on Benchmarking

Poverty measurement involves two concepts: (1) a definition of family resources, and (2) a "threshold" against which resources are compared to determine if a family is poor. The NRC panel recommends basing the threshold on expenditures on "necessities" (food, shelter, and clothing) plus a little more. However, the NRC panel cautioned that setting the level below which a family is considered poor is more of an art than a science. The panel therefore suggested a range of alternatives and left it to policymakers to determine the most appropriate levels. Specifically, the NRC panel recommends selecting the 30th to 35th percentile in the distribution of annual expenditures on food, shelter, and clothing among families of four (two adults and two children), and then multiplying this expenditure level by between 1.15 and 1.25. Thresholds for other family sizes and types would be determined by an equivalency scale calculation.

Because there is some discretion in the setting of the poverty threshold, Table 1 shows poverty rates between 1991 and 1996 using the current methodology (column 1) and using three alternative ways to determine the threshold for the NRC experimental measure -- one benchmarked and two not benchmarked:

- The "Benchmarked" measure is the NRC measure benchmarked to the 1996 poverty rate; in this case the thresholds are "backed out" by first setting the new aggregate poverty rate to the current rate and then setting the thresholds at the level that achieves this rate given the new resource definitions. In this case, the threshold falls to approximately the 25th percentile in the distribution of expenditures.
- The "NRC Experimental (midpoint)" (column 3) is based on selecting approximately the 32.5 percentile in the distribution of annual expenditures and then multiplying this expenditure by approximately 1.2 -- the midpoints of the NRC recommendations;
- The "NRC Experimental (lower bound)" (column 4) is based on selecting the 30th percentile in the distribution of annual expenditures and then multiplying this expenditure by 1.15 -- the lower bound of the NRC recommendations;

Both the NRC Experimental "midpoint" and "lower bound" estimates would not match the current overall poverty rate and thus would be considered "not benchmarked."

It is important to understand that benchmarking only assures that the aggregate poverty rate is identical for the official and the alternative measure in the benchmarked year. However, the distribution of poverty among subgroups will change whether or not the estimates are benchmarked (see Table 2). In general, working families and families with large out-of-pocket medical expenses would more likely be measured as poor, and nonworking families with substantial in-kind benefits would less likely be measured as poor with the NRC experimental series. This would have geographic as well as subgroup poverty rate implications. For example, even though the relative proportion of poor who are Black declines under both alternatives (not shown in Table 2), the estimated Black poverty rate falls with benchmarking but rises or stays constant with a non-benchmarked measure. Similarly, both historical and future trends would differ. For instance, the benchmarked measure would be identical to the current rate in 1996 but higher in 1991. (The faster fall using the alternative measure is largely due to the expansion in the EITC.)

Pros and Cons of Benchmarking and Not Benchmarking

Pros of benchmarking:

- May provide an easier transition to the new official measure of poverty because there will not be a change in the overall level of poverty. (Critics, of course, will still charge that this level is arbitrary.) In addition, with a benchmarked measure it may be easier to implement changes in the poverty guidelines issued by HHS for program purposes.
- Focuses the arguments on the relative distribution of who is poor rather than on how many people are poor; experts would say that the results on the distribution of who is poor are more objective and scientific than those on the total number of poor.

Cons of benchmarking:

- Violates the NRC recommendation that the threshold should be based on the 30th-35th percentile in the expenditure distribution. In order to benchmark, the threshold falls to about the 25th percentile of expenditures on food, shelter, and clothing. This may cost us the political cover of following a nonpartisan expert panel, and may raise questions of motive.
- Will highlight the distributional consequences of moving to an NRC-based alternative more clearly than under the non-benchmarked alternatives (although they have the same distributional consequences); for instance the poverty rate for some groups would fall in absolute terms with benchmarking.
- There is a perceived illogic in using an overall poverty rate from a method we say is flawed to determine a key part of a methodology we say is better.

Pros of not benchmarking:

- Incorporates the recommendations of the NRC panel, based on their professional judgement from the best available evidence (though, as noted, this judgement is subjective), and therefore provides some limited political cover.

Cons of not benchmarking:

- Results in a higher poverty rate (although the trends over time are similar.)

Part II: Key Decision for this Meeting

There are basically three options: (1) Advise the Census Bureau to highlight some non-benchmarked estimates along with benchmarked estimates; (2) Actively advise the Census Bureau to highlight only benchmarked estimates; (3) Remain silent on the issue (with the likely result that Census will only highlight benchmarked estimates).

Pros of advising the Census Bureau to highlight some non-benchmarked estimates

- Keeps the option of non-benchmarked estimates in the public dialog, which may preserve the option of not benchmarking when and if we decide to move to a new official measure of poverty.
- Narrowing the range of options in any dimension may be perceived as moving us closer to a final decision, and might limit our flexibility.
- The Census report may appear more credible if it includes a non-benchmarked alternative, given that the NRC's recommendation did not involve benchmarking.

- If we decide to change to an NRC-based measure as the official measure of poverty and if we decide to benchmark the official measure, it may make the change look small compared to selecting the non-benchmarked alternative. It gives us an ability to look "reasonable" by adopting a less extreme change.

Cons of advising the Census Bureau to highlight some non-benchmarked estimates

- Even if we're not certain that we want to change the official measure of poverty, we may be held accountable for estimates that poverty is really higher than the current rate.
- Even if the non-benchmarked estimates are simply among those highlighted, people could focus on them and create an "uproar." Alternatively, some of our traditional allies may like the non-benchmarked estimates and feel abandoned should we ultimately choose to benchmark.

Pros of advising the Census Bureau to highlight only benchmarked estimates

- It may raise less of a political "uproar." This would be particularly valuable if we believe we are likely to benchmark any new official measure anyway.

Cons of advising the Census Bureau to highlight only benchmarked estimates

- It may make it more difficult not to benchmark in the future.
- If Census does not closely follow the NRC recommendation, it may appear that they had been inappropriately influenced by political considerations, particularly since non-benchmarked estimates are already in the public domain.

Pros of remaining silent on the issue of benchmarking

- Given that, at this point, Census plans to only highlight benchmarked estimates this contains all of the advantages of advising Census to only present benchmarked estimates outlined above.
- In addition, it may give us political cover by allowing another, independent statistical, agency to make the judgement about how the level of poverty should be determined.

Cons of remaining silent on the issue of benchmarking

- Likely (because Census currently plans to only highlight benchmarked estimates) contains all of the cons of advising Census to present only benchmarked estimates.
- We may not want Census to make the decision that non-benchmarked estimates will not be highlighted without our input.
