REMARKS AT THE JUBILEE SCHOOL
AMMAN, JORDAN
NOVEMBER 13, 1999

I think that everyone who cares about peace and stability in Israel and its neighbors should be supporting the peace process and the work that is currently being undertaken by the Israeli and Palestinian leadership. And that is certainly what I intend to do, and as an official trip that I've been on here in Israel and Jordan and to Ramallah, I have tried to represent the United States and the President and, in particular, to represent the strong commitment that we have in the United States to the peace process. And I would hope that every American would support these extraordinarily difficult undertakings, that are now going on and that is certainly what the President and I intend to do, to stand with those who stand for peace.

Thank you very much.
