Biographical Note

Consisting of more than 50 national and international unions, the AFL-CIO is the largest federation of unions in the United States. The AFL-CIO represents the interest of labor and lobbies state and federal governments on behalf of their union membership. The AFL-CIO's interests include collective bargaining, safe working conditions, equal opportunities, and worker training. The AFL-CIO endorses political candidates that support and best represent these interests. During the Clinton Administration, three different presidents led the AFL-CIO: Lane Kirkland, Thomas Donahue, and John Sweeney. Lane Kirkland served as President of the AFL-CIO from 1979 to 1995. The Clinton Administration primarily worked with Kirkland's AFL-CIO on the economic plan and health care. Kirkland's term was also characterized by a decline in union membership and the support of democracy in many international countries. By 1995, Kirkland's leadership troubled many members of the AFL-CIO. Issues of concern included the passage of NAFTA and the lack of health care reform. With limited support from the unions, Kirkland resigned in August of 1995. After Kirkland's resignation, Thomas Donahue was elected President of the AFL-CIO in August of 1995. By late 1995, the Clinton Administration claimed several accomplishments regarding organized labor and the AFL-CIO. Such accomplishments included appointments favorable to unions, improvements to occupational safety, and the resolution of collective bargaining disputes. At this time, the AFL-CIO identified thirty-two bills supported by organized labor that were signed into law by President Clinton. In October 1995, the AFL-CIO Convention elected John Sweeney as President of the AFL-CIO. Sweeney served as AFL-CIO President for the remainder of the Clinton Administration. Sweeney's influence brought about a new organizing strategy for the AFL-CIO, including working women's participation in the labor movement. In 1996, the AFL-CIO's Special Convention approved this new political agenda, which focused on economic, health, and worker safety issues. Labor organizations, including the AFL-CIO, circulated issue advertisements during the 1996 elections. Many of the AFL-CIO's issue advertisements concerned spending cuts to the federal budget. The AFL-CIO viewed cuts to education, Medicaid, Medicare, and Social Security as detrimental to working families. At the AFL-CIO Convention in 1997, President Sweeney indicated that the AFL-CIO would focus more on organizing workers as opposed to political campaigns. In 1997, the AFL-CIO created four new organizing programs. In 1998, restructuring within the AFL-CIO resulted in the Working for America Institute, which focused on economic policy development. In 1998, the Clinton Administration again claimed several accomplishments regarding organized labor. These 1998 accomplishments were also considered economic achievements and included creation of new jobs, support of collective bargaining, defense of labor standards and worker protections, and fighting for a balanced budget. Cabinet Affairs files includes scheduling materials on rebuilding schools events, AFL-CIO publications on the federal budget and elections spending, and background material regarding the AFL-CIO's 23rd Biennial Convention. Calligraphy Office files contain insert cards and invitations. Chief of Staff's Office records include the files of Harold Ickes, Jennifer O'Connor, and Karen Tramontano. Harold Ickes served the White House as an Assistant to the President and Deputy Chief of Staff from January 1994 to January 1997. Ickes' files contain clippings and correspondence concerning issues of importance to the AFL-CIO such as the federal budget, tax policy, Medicare, employee benefits and protections, labor disputes, and union leadership. Ickes' files also contain advertisements, mail-outs, and press releases sent to the White House from the AFL-CIO. In addition, memos, notes, remarks, and scheduling materials in Ickes' files concern White House meetings with the AFL-CIO. Jennifer O'Connor worked as Special Assistant to the President in Cabinet Affairs in 1993 and 1994; Special Assistant to the President in the Chief of Staff's Office in 1995; and as Special Assistant to the Deputy Chief of Staff for Policy and Political Affairs in 1996. O'Connor's files consist of binders containing lists, memoranda, remarks, and talking points concerning the conferences, conventions, membership, and organization of the AFL-CIO. O'Connor files also contain biographies, memos, lists, and notes which concern White House ceremonies, events, and meetings with AFL-CIO members. In addition, memos and attached materials in O'Connor's files outline external political activities of the AFL-CIO. Correspondence and remarks concern issues specific to the AFL-CIO's Transportation Communications International Union, such as aviation reform and retirement benefits. Karen Tramontano served as Deputy Assistant to the President and Counsel to the Office of the Chief of Staff from 1997 to 2001.
