83 folders, approximately 1,694 pages

Summary

This collection contains materials from the White House staff office of the National Security Council (NSC), from 1994. Records include correspondence, memoranda, newspaper articles, press releases, reports, and talking points. The majority of the materials are letters from President Clinton to various members of Congress. The President's letters are in response to congressional members whose original correspondence questioned the President's authority to use force without prior approval by Congress. Talking points explain the arguments for military intervention to various groups that the President met at the White House, including the Congressional Black Caucus, or to various news organizations and wire services. Reports include the justification of economic fund transfers in support of the reconstruction of Haiti, the public affairs strategy for possible military intervention, or the notification to Congress as required by the War Powers Resolution, when U.S. forces were deployed.

Scope and Content Note

The materials in FOIA 2006-0187-F are a selective, not necessarily all inclusive, body of documents responsive to the topic of the FOIA. Researchers should consult the archivist about related materials. FOIA request 2006-0187-F contains materials from the White House staff office of the National Security Council (NSC), from 1994. Specifically, the responsive documents are the numbered documents of the NSC Records Management System (RMS). The Records Management System files of the National Security Council comprise all the responsive documents for 2006-0187-F. The RMS numbered documents were submitted to President Clinton through his National Security Advisor at the time, Anthony Lake. While other NSC staff members prepared the original responses, the final document was typically authored and sent by Lake to the President. The majority of the documents contain congressional correspondence dealing with President Clinton's authority to use the U.S. military in Haiti without prior approval of Congress. Also included are talking points prepared for President Clinton at events or groups, like the Congressional Black Caucus, arguing in favor of possible military intervention. Also contained are letters to President Clinton from various individuals or non-governmental organizations that debate the pros and cons of a military invasion. Other letters congratulate the President on the successful intervention in Haiti without largescale military combat. Other documents include memos to the President regarding the transfer of Foreign Military Financing Funds to the Economic Support Fund for economic reconstruction in Haiti. Other files contain congressional and public affairs strategy for the possibility of military intervention.

Biographical Note

In December 1990, Father Jean-Bertrand Aristide had been elected President of Haiti, only to be forcibly overthrown by the Haitian military during September of 1991. With Aristide arrested and expelled from the country, power to govern Haiti was assumed by a trio of military dictators led by General Raoul Cedras. Faced with the continued political repression and severe economic hardship if they remained in Haiti, thousands of Haitians left the country in boats and attempted to enter the United States as refugees. Intercepted by the U.S. Coast Guard, most of the refugees were returned to Haiti. Beginning in late 1993, however, there occurred a new wave of Haitian boat people headed for Florida. Concerned about the deteriorating situation in Haiti and the resurgence of refugee efforts to enter into the U.S., the Clinton Administration intensified its diplomatic and economic pressures on General Cedras to relinquish power and reinstate President Aristide. Cedras refused to do so. By the summer of 1994, President Clinton was moving closer to the decision that military intervention into Haiti was unavoidable. The Clinton Administration pushed an authorizing resolution through the U.N. Security Council. The U.N. resolution, passed by the Security Council on July 31, 1994, authorized a multinational military force to invade Haiti, forcibly depose the Cedras junta, and restore governing power to democratically elected President Aristide. By this time President Clinton had already decided to send U.S. troops to Haiti and had issued the necessary orders. But, while the American invasion force was enroute to Haiti, the U.N. resolution was adopted. With the resolution's adoption, the Cedras regime gave in to U.S. demands. On September 18, 1994, Cedras agreed that he and the other military leaders would step down and Aristide would resume governing power. As part of the agreement, 20,000 U.S. troops began to arrive in Haiti on September 19. On October 15, Aristide returned to Haiti and was reinstated as President.
