Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Won't the IRA say this is just changing the sequencing again. Basically they have a matter of mistrust. They still think they're going to get jacked around on the executive on this, don't they? (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Let me ask you this. What about the legislation itself? I hear the SDLP has problems with it. (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: But do you think the legislation problems would go away if you had any statement from the IRA? (C)

Prime Minister Blair: I think so.

The President: Could you change the legislation to overcome directives if you get the IRA statement? (C)

Prime Minister Blair:

The President: Let me call you back. When are you going to bed? It must be getting pretty late there now. (U)

Prime Minister Blair: It's only 7 o'clock now. (U)
