Summary of Conclusions

1. Deputies met September 15 to plan for September 18 meetings with the French on post-settlement implementation issues. They reached the following conclusions about potential areas of agreement with the French on the shape and mandate for the political implementation structure:

- settlement documents should establish the political implementation structure and its mandate;
- the UN should give approval for the structure through a Security Council resolution;
- there should be a senior civilian head;
- the head should be charged with coordinating among the various actors responsible for post-settlement programs;
- the head should serve as an interface with the parties;
- the NAC would oversee military implementation by the IFOR;

- the Commander of the IFOR, CINCSOUTH, would maintain liaison with the head of the political implementation structure and with the UN. (S)

2. As for areas of disagreement, Deputies identified the following key requirements for the U.S. on which we could not compromise:

- the IFOR and its force commander would not take political guidance or be required to coordinate with the UN or any entity, other than the NAC, through SACEUR;
- we cannot agree to the French suggestion that disputes in the NAC would be referred to the UN Security Council;
- the UN would not be permitted to select the head of the political implementation structure, although we would want the UN to approve the choice made by the Contact Group;
- while we can agree that a French officer (the present UN Force Commander) could become the Deputy Force Commander of the IFOR and retain operational control over residual UN forces in Croatia and the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, we cannot agree that the Deputy Force Commander should also be the Land Force Commander as the French propose. We continue to favor making the Ace Rapid Reaction Force (ARRC) Commander the Land Force Commander for the IFOR. (S)

3. Deputies noted their previous decision that the head of the political implementation structure might have direct authority over some entities in country and decided that questions on the scope of the head's authority should be deferred until the terms of the settlement were better understood. (S)

4. On the issue of whether the head of the political implementation structure should be an EU national (as proposed by the French) or an American, Deputies decided we could ultimately accept a European but that we should seek to obtain European concessions on other implementation issues before agreeing. (S)

5. Deputies noted their previous decision that non-NATO troops interested in participating would need to be integrated into IFOR under NATO operational control but deferred discussion of how that would be done. They agreed that JCS and OSD should revise the existing paper on non-NATO involvement to include specific options for integrating Russia and other non-NATO countries while preserving a unified NATO chain of command (Action: JCS/OSD). (S)

6. Deputies asked State to revise its paper on the political implementation structure and circulate it by COB Monday for submission to Principals (Action: State) (S).

FRENCH PROPOSALS ON IFOR

The following discussion provides a summary of French positions on the IFOR and comparison and analysis with developing U.S. positions.

NOTE: THE FRENCH POSITION IS DERIVED FROM AN UNOFFICIAL TRANSLATION OF A PAPER CIRCULATED AT NATO ON 11 SEP, AND THE U.S. POSITION IS BASED ON WORKING DOCUMENTS, NOT COORDINATED POSITIONS.

POLITICAL STRUCTURE:

FR: The position and functions must be set out in the peace plan.

Establish a senior representative charged with oversight of overall plan as well as the missions and phases of a largely allied force.

US: Structure would flow directly from the terms of the settlement.

Must have a clear political mandate (blessed by UNSCR).

Will coordinate with the IFOR but will have no authority to control the NATO force. ⊛

UNSC ROLE:

FR: UNSC will approve the peace plan and confirm the senior political representative nominated by the U.N. Sec. Gen.

Authorize a multinational force under unified command and control to carry out Chapter VII operations.

US: UNSC blesses the peace plan and provisions for a political structure but does not necessarily have any role in selecting a senior representative much less controlling IFOR operations. who selects?

SENIOR REPRESENTATIVE:

FR: An official proposed by the UNSYG and confirmed by the UNSC to oversee all aspects of the peace plan.

Will establish a dialogue with political authorities of all parties to the peace plan.

Will be briefed by the IFOR commander on military operations; will be appraised of difficulties as they arise and will report to the NAC and UNSC on progress of the plan.

US: Preferably an American with internationally recognized credentials.

Operates with a small staff to coordinate activities of the independent agencies designated to carry out the elements of the peace plan, economic reconstruction, etc.

North Atlantic Council:

FR: The NAC will approve military planning for the IFOR.

Will authorize the NATO SYG to coordinate closely with UN SYG and the Senior Representative on implementation.

Will be briefed by the military CINC before proceeding with each phase of the operation and on any difficulties that may arise.

Will be briefed by Senior Representative as required.

If there is a disagreement within the NAC the NATO SYG will refer the problem to the UN SYG.

US: The NAC will charter the IFOR and provide guidance for military planning.

Will coordinate with the UN and the Senior Representative.

ROLE OF SACEUR:

FR: SACEUR will provide interface between the CINC and the NAC and provide necessary support to the operation.

US: SACEUR would fulfill his normal role in the NATO integrated military structure for NATO operations.

Will report to the NAC on activities of the theater CINC.

CINC of IFOR:

FR: Responsible for carrying out military operations.

Will report to the NAC via SACEUR; will inform Senior Rep. of military operations and any difficulties that arise.

Will have the UNPROFOR commander as his deputy in charge of residual UN forces and all land operations.
→ Macedonia/Croatia

US: Commands all IFOR forces and UN forces that remain in the theater of operations.

Reports via NATO military channels on operations.

Coordinates with Senior Rep and other agencies through consultation and regular meetings.

Employs existing NATO command structure and procedures.

Develops procedures to integrate non-NATO countries under NATO command.

COMMENT

The French proposals cover a lot of common ground with our initial planning for peace implementation. However, several of their specific points stand out:

-- The role of the political superstructure and the senior representative is a point of divergence. The French seem to give this entity some direct authority over NATO military operations, whereas we envision his function as purely one of coordination.

-- The French emphasize an expanded UN role. We envision a UN blessed peace plan but with no direct UN role in selecting key officials, or overseeing implementation. In no case can we accept the French idea of letting the UN be a tie-breaker for disagreements in the NAC.

-- Though they talk around the subject, the French effor seems to dilute the NATO military command structure as much as possible. The proposal to position Janvier as overall Deputy CINC with control of all ground operations (including US forces) and all previous UN forces will be very controversial. This would effectively provide a French "dual key" for the all-important NATO ground operation.

But this was agreed for Vance-Owen - makes sense in larger political terms

IMPLEMENTATION STRUCTURE IN A BOSNIAN SETTLEMENT

The Task

Implementing a settlement in all its political, economic, humanitarian, military and other aspects will require a coordinating superstructure with a clear mandate to make the settlement work, as well as mobilization of a variety of organizations, most already active in the Balkans. The task would be to integrate, coordinate and, to a lesser degree, oversee progress on the various political undertakings of a settlement package and the activities of international organizations and activities involved in different aspects of implementation.

"Peace implementation" will require not only a military component -- through the IFOR to ensure a secure environment within which implementation can go forward -- but also a means of ensuring continued facilitation of political negotiations among the parties, promotion of local conflict resolution and monitoring of human rights, coordination of economic reconstruction, delivery of humanitarian assistance, and monitoring of various confidence-building/arms control measures of increasing scope.

An important aspect, yet to be determined, is the extent of direct involvement of the implementation structure in the internal affairs of the Bosnian state. The Bosnian parties will wish to have the least direct involvement by the implementation structure. The international community will expect the structure to bring about full implementation. The tension between these parties will have a bearing on the final settlement.

Mandate

The legal mandate for the implementation structure should derive from the settlement documents -- including the approval of all parties of the settlement. The structure would be a free-standing authority. We should seek UNSC blessing (but not creation of) the structure through appropriate language in a Security Council Resolution acknowledging the actual settlement. However, the structure should not be a UN-mandated entity.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE (FRI) 09.15. '95 11:55 NO. 1460120961 PAGE 2

Mission

The mission of the structure will be to coordinate among, rather than to control, the organizations that will play a role in the region after settlement: the NATO-led implementation force (IFOR), EU, ICFY, OSCE, IFIs, UN, UNHCR, ICRC and possibly other NGOs, bilateral players, etc. Some elements might report directly to the Senior Implementation Coordinator depending on the terms of the settlement. The implementation structure will serve as a bridge between the international actors and local officials, as appropriate.

Termination

The structure should specifically be maintained as long as required in the view of the Senior Implementation Committee (see below), but in no case less than one year beyond the date of final withdrawal of the IFOR and for period not to exceed three years.

Funding

The administrative costs (including salaries) of the structure might be funded by the parties to the settlement according to a set proportional formula still to be determined. (note: USG funding is subject to Congressional authorization/appropriations.) The entity would establish an annual budget for presentation to contributors with requests for future contributions. The salary of the Senior Implementation Coordinator should be established at the time of the settlement.

U.S. Leadership

How the United States seeks to define the role, mandate, structure and senior leadership of such an international on-the-ground political component of settlement implementation will directly affect:

-- the credibility of the package that our current negotiating efforts are promoting with the parties in the region;

-- our ability to generate sufficient diplomatic support for a NATO-led military implementation force along the lines we desire;

-- our ability to encourage and ensure continued progress in the various political undertakings of a settlement once launched; and,

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

DEPARTMENT OF STATE (FR) 09.15.95 11:55 NO. 1460120961 PAGE 3

-- the credibility of our exit strategy for the IFOR and the withdrawal of its major U.S. elements by a date certain in late 1996.

This latter point will be especially critical. While the NATO-led IFOR is intended to be of specific and limited duration, a broader implementation structure will have the opportunity (indeed requirement) to run longer. (Just as an ongoing international presence to support and oversee democratic development within Haiti provided the context within which timely withdrawal of initial intervention forces was politically possible, so too will our announcement of an exit date and strategy for the IFOR need to be accompanied by the sense that an implementation structure for dealing with longer-term problems is in place in Bosnia.)

Senior Implementation Coordinator

? The implementation structure would be headed by a respected senior statesman, a strong personality and preferably an American to symbolize U.S. commitment and leadership in brokering the settlement.

Discussion: An American would establish the U.S. commitment to successful conclusion of the effort. He would likely enjoy greater effectiveness and command access to a broader array of resources. He would be more amenable to working toward U.S. goals (e.g., avoiding getting trapped into long-term commitments). With clear U.S. claim to the role, he would pre-empt a political competition for the position. A non-American might enjoy the support of a wider group of countries, although he might have less clout in practice and be less inclined to support U.S. objectives. However, if the implementation breaks down, the U.S. might be further removed from responsibility for breakdown. Opening the door to a non-American would likely produce Carl Bildt as the person to beat.

? The Senior Implementation Coordinator might be nominated by any settlement group participant and agreed on by consensus. He might have three or four deputies from different countries, such as Russia. He would have no formal line authority over the implementation agencies, but would work to -- ensure that various players do not duplicate tasks, undermine the "sub-contract" work of other agencies, or contravene the general principles of the settlement.

-- establish general parameters for the overall mission by acting as interpreter of the terms of the settlement, and encouraging (but not necessarily dictating) international agencies to adhere to those parameters.

Senior Implementation Committee

This would be the major authority. The Senior Implementation Coordinator would chair consultative meetings of the senior resident representatives of the main organizations active on the ground in Bosnia. Those agencies would likely include but not be restricted to IFOR, UN, UNHCR, EU/ECMM, OSCE, and IBRD. Other possibilities include ICFY, UNCRO, any UNPROFOR remnant, an international reconstruction mission, UN human rights monitors, Office of the UNSYG, Office of the NATO SYG, and possibly an arms-parity control organization. The SIC would have no line authority over any of these agencies, unless an agency delegated specific decision-making authority to him.

Major aid donors and/or other governments playing a key bilateral role in the settlement may be included in the Senior Implementation Committee (or other committees, see below) in an appropriate way, if they provide a liaison staff to the SIC headquarters.

NGOs would not be represented in the Senior Committee. However, an NGO advisory board could be established of representatives of organizations willing to provide liaison officials and attend relevant meetings as determined by the SIC.

Functions

The SIC would exercise direction by virtue of his free-standing authority and through his staff. As the senior international figure in Bosnia, he would be the locus for contact with the Federation and Serb Republic Governments and would maintain liaison offices in Belgrade, Zagreb, and possibly Skopje and elsewhere.

? Functions under specific committees would be the following, and perhaps other fields, under the overall coordination of the Senior Coordination Committee:

-- Military Security

The SIC would have no line authority, but may be able to assist the commander with liaison with local political authorities. He would work to ensure that non-IFOR activities do not inadvertently find themselves in conflict zones, and try to coordinate the transfer of early IFOR tasks (such as boundary demarcation) to other authorities as necessary.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE (FAX) 09/19/95 11:33 NO. 1405120901 PAGE 5

-- Human Rights

SIC authority would rest with his ability to select a committee chairman (probably OSCE) and coordinate overall efforts in a direction most supportive of the settlement.

-- Resettlement

UNHCR is the most readily-apparent entity with a claim to leading this effort. The SIC would be able to provide liaison support to UNHCR, if needed, and deal with the UNSYG via the UNSYG liaison office.

-- Reconstruction

If the EU leads the reconstruction effort, the SIC might be able to ensure that EU efforts are consonant with local and other international (and bilateral) reconstruction efforts.

-- Security Stabilization

A comprehensive package of arms control and CBM measures should be included with the settlement agreement and provide for implementation by the OSCE. A background paper on this is attached. The Germans have put ideas forward on this, and we may wish to encourage them to work with OSCE to develop their ideas for a package here. The SIC might become operationally involved in coordination of any subsequent negotiation-verification efforts on arms control, though he would have no line authority over this function beyond encouraging efforts within the parameters of the settlement.

-- War Crimes

The UN war crimes tribunal may be the most readily-apparent entity with a claim to chairing this committee. The SIC would be able to provide liaison and even political support in dealings with local officials, as appropriate, and with the UNSYG via the UNSYG liaison office.

-- Democratic Elections and Institutions

Perhaps best situated to chair this committee would be the chief of an OSCE democracy-building entity that would have to be created at OSCE just prior to settlement. OSCE is best situated to integrate NGO concerns and recruit monitors for elections. The SIC would again wield most authority in supporting efforts with local officials.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

DEPARTMENT OF STATE (FR) 09/13/95 11:33 NO. 1406120901 PAGE 6

-- Border Control

Though the IFOR may have some initial responsibilities, these should be transferred to a combination of local authorities and international monitors at an appropriate time. EUMM may be the best candidate to develop a mandate in this area and chair the committee. The SIC would again serve a partial liaison role with local officials, and work to ensure good cooperation with IFOR.

-- Legal/Dispute Settlement

The SIC would have under his direct authority a Legal Office for whatever legal issues he determined needed attention. He could use that expertise to promote the resolution of any disputes with the consent of the parties affected. The legal office could provide non-binding advice on legal interpretations of the settlement terms, and provide advice as requested by various committees.

The SIC would designate a chairman for each of the above committees who could be either the local head of a relevant international agency or a deputy of the SIC. The guiding principle in organizing this structure should be pragmatism. A significant portion of the SIC's authority will derive from his ability to select committee chairmen. To the extent possible, however, the structure should pave the way for Bosnian governmental institutions called for in the settlement, e.g. reconstruction commission, arbitration panel, and might provide a few important jobs to offer to nationals of various governments to help secure their support.

Secretariat

The Senior Implementation Coordinator (SIC) would have a small secretariat located in or near Sarajevo. The various international agencies should be located in close proximity to the Office of the Senior Implementation Coordinator, with small, full-time liaison staffs (paid by parent agencies) in the same building.

Political Liaison Group

This group would be appended to the SIC's office. It would include representatives of the settlement group, as well as the representatives of the UNSYG's office, the NATO SYG's office, and the EU President's office -- all located in the SIC's headquarters. The group would be formally headed by the SIC, but serve as a general advisory/liaison group for the SIC. It would have no direct authority over the SIC, but be available to provide insights on possible differences among the parties. The Russians would be included if they are part of the final settlement group.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

DEPARTMENT OF STATE (FR) 09.15.95 11:55 NO. 14601209961 PAGE

Russia

The question of bringing Russia on board is discussed separately. It is worth noting that in addition to the Political Liaison Group, that Russian participation in the implementation structure (not necessarily including the IFOR), and especially the arms control entity, might be possible.

Transition

The announcement of the SIC should be made on the day of actual settlement. Most agencies will already be present in Bosnia with senior representatives on the scene. The SIC will simply need to travel to Sarajevo, take occupancy of a (larger) building provided by the Bosnians, begin building his secretariat, and inviting the various international agencies to establish liaison offices under his roof. The transition should not be exceedingly disruptive given that only a small staff is required and most of the contributors to SIC activities will already be physically present in Sarajevo.

Confidence-Building/Arms Control Measures
To Accompany Political Settlement

Assumption: At the onset, it will be important that the United States include elements of weapons control in connection with any settlement package in order to support the cease-fire and to build political support among allies and partners for the overall U.S. initiative. The second step would be to establish a regime to create something approaching a Federation-Bosnian Serb military balance. Such a military balance can only be created by taking into account Serb and Croation forces in the longer term. Any set of proposals to that effect, however, would have to be phased and flexible, readily adapting to changing circumstances on the ground and open to expansion over time in both scope and application.

Step 1: Conditions Imposed at Settlement: In the first instance, we should concentrate on political/military confidence-building measures geared to specific areas and tactical situations along lines of confrontation within Bosnia itself. Their immediate objective would be to supplement and help stabilize the cease-fire contained in the settlement; accordingly, they would focus on disengagement of the parties, preliminary forms of weapons control, and transparency.

More specifically, this might include (perhaps within the text of any cease-fire component of a settlement):

-- Separation of forces and weapons along designated confrontation lines (e.g., 2 km for infantry, 10 km for mortars, 20 km for heavy weapons).

-- Ban on certain (possibly all) military activities in selected areas or region-wide. Total ban on aircraft activities.

-- Establishment of protected heavy weapons collection/deactivation sites. (?)

-- Tighten Sharp Guard and/or other measures to prevent weapons flows into the region until specifically delineated implementation goals have been met. (?)

-- Establishment of joint liaison/communication links among opposing local commanders under the active oversight of the Implementation Force.

-- Establishment of procedures for extensive monitoring all of the above measures by designated elements of the Implementation Force.

Step 2: The Military Balance: As progress is made with each of these measures, we would seek to expand them in scope and effect. As some would presumably be intended for a long duration, we would wish to build in the possibility that, as the NATO-led military implementation force draws down with the accomplishment of its basic mission, monitoring/verification duties might be eventually passed to another body -- perhaps some configuration of UN/OSCE observers. It would be necessary at this point to bring in Serbia and Croatia.

Step 3: Long-Term Perspective: Even as our immediate focus should be on local stabilizing measures within Bosnia proper to support the cease-fire and settlement, the United States should be prepared to offer -- at an appropriate political moment -- a long-term perspective for the region as whole. This would be consistent with an emphasis on a comprehensive approach to the problems of the former Yugoslavia.

The stated objective of such a U.S. initiative for confidence-building/arms control measures would be strengthening stability and security throughout the region, with the specific aim of eliminating disparities and capabilities for launching surprise attack and for initiating, at a regional level, large-scale offensive action. Reductions, limitations and the realization of a more defensive set of force postures might be examined as contributions to a more stable military balance.

Any initial deliberations among parties as to participation and modalities could take place in an informal setting, although the intention should always be to transfer any such negotiations back into a more formal OSCE framework at an appropriate time. Recognizing the many inherent difficulties involved in any move towards a more ambitious arms control regime for the region, the U.S. objective would, in the first instance, be as much to set in place an ongoing process as the expectation of any early progress towards a CFE-like regime.

POSITION PAPER

Subject: [redacted] Non-NATO Participation in NATO Implementation Force in Bosnia

1. (S) Purpose. To establish a Joint Staff/OSD position regarding [redacted] non-NATO participation in a NATO Implementation Force (IFOR) in Bosnia, in response to a tasking in the NSC Principals Committee meeting, 5 Sep 95.

2. (S) Background Points.

- In its memo to the Principals for the 5 Sep meeting, Deputies Committee agreed that:
  - ◊ The IFOR will be a NATO operation with limited non-NATO participation.
  - ◊ While operational efficiency of the IFOR will be reduced by involvement of non-NATO forces, non-NATO participation -- [redacted] -- will be politically necessary and in some respects, desirable (e.g., as an opportunity for Partnership for Peace countries to operate with NATO forces).
  - ◊ Non-NATO forces must be militarily capable, interoperable with NATO, and fully equipped; they must accept NATO operational control (OPCON) similar to a CJTF.
- [redacted]
- The IFOR will set precedents for future NATO CJTFs in out-of-area operations.

3. (S) Discussion.
Non-NATO troop contributing countries, including [redacted] are kept apprised of NATO planning by way of the Ad Hoc Planning and Coordination Group (AHPCG). This forum is appropriate for informing them of NATO's plans for IFOR and their proposed participation.

If the NATO plan for IFOR draws on past experience with OPLAN 40104, it will be a phased operation. Phase I will be the preparatory phase in which forces are trained, exercised and prepared for movement into the theater of operations. Training of non-NATO participants, to include basic familiarization with NATO procedures and operational concepts, could be accomplished in this phase. Since the intent is to deploy IFOR rapidly, however, the preparatory phase may be abbreviated, meaning that non-NATO forces might not be available from the outset of the operation. Forces currently assigned to UNPROFOR and deemed not interoperable with NATO forces (e.g., EO 13526 1.4d would not be invited to participate.

Agreement would have to be reached with the UN and with non-NATO participants for transfer of authority (TOA)/transfer of OPCON to NATO. A Status of Forces Agreement (SOFA) would also be needed for all participants in the implementation operation.

Agreement on TOA/transfer of OPCON may hinge on the presence of a UN representative in theater and/or a non-NATO military official in a key position. A UN civilian official could serve at Theater Command level for consultation on political issues. It is not clear at this point that this would be acceptable to NATO allies and non-NATO contributors alike. This issue requires planning to avoid undercutting our CJTF position at NATO.

Advantages of EO 13526 1.4d non-NATO participation:

- Assists NATO's generation of overall force strength required for peace enforcement mission.
- Enhances prospects of long-term regional stability EO 13526 1.4d EO 13526 1.4d
- Enhances relations with 1.4(d) non-NATO countries by acknowledging their interests in the region.
- Enhances 1.4(d) non-NATO countries' confidence in NATO.
- Enhances impartiality of IFOR by including EO 13526 1.4d 1.4(d)
- Takes advantage of opportunity to enhance PFP relationship with 1.4(d) and others.
- EO 13526 1.4d NATO does not accept additional financial burden. Others should also pay their share.
- Increases likelihood of 1.4(d) in UN Security Council.

Disadvantages of 1.4(d) non-NATO participation:

- Detracts from IFOR effectiveness due lack of interoperability with non-NATO forces.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

- Complicates command and control. EO 13526 1.4d non-NATO countries may insist on command structure that is not strictly under NATO's OPCON.
- EO 13526 1.4d 1.4(d)
- Opens the door for non-NATO participation beyond desirable level and desirable participants.
- EO 13526 1.4d

4. ~~(S)~~ Recommendation. NATO IFOR should only include 1.4(d) non-NATO contingents under the following conditions:

- NATO specifies that 1.4(d) participation is a special case.
- NATO specifies requirement for NATO OPCON of EO 13526 1.4d non-NATO forces, based on written terms of reference defining "operational control."
- Non-NATO participants attain NATO standards (including training, physical fitness, medical status, equipment, logistics, sustainability). The theater commander would have a right of inspection prior to deployment of any contingent and could recommend acceptance/rejection. (EUCOM notes that this condition would exclude most non-NATO states.)
- NATO limits participation of EO 13526 1.4d non-NATO combat forces to avoid most serious consequences of lack of interoperability with other IFOR elements.
- NATO encourages EO 13526 1.4d non-NATO countries contribution consisting of combat support and combat service support forces, such as engineers, military police, logistics and transportation units.
- EO 13526 1.4d
- NATO specifies that the Ad Hoc Planning and Coordination Group is the appropriate body for bringing non-NATO troop contributors into the IFOR planning process.
- NATO gives further consideration to command and oversight issues, and their relationship to the US CJTF position at NATO.

Engaging the Russians on Bosnia Settlement Implementation

Overview.

Your trip to Moscow will be our first opportunity to sound out Russian views on their participation in implementation of a Balkans settlement. While Russian thinking on implementation is not very far along, it is clear they are discomfited by the prospect of being left out of a U.S.- or NATO-led Peace Implementation Force (IFOR). As we think about how we might bring Russia into the IFOR, we must face up to four fundamental issues:

- Regardless of the ultimate mandate or political chapeau created for the IFOR, its commander will almost certainly be an American general. As a first step, we need to establish whether there are circumstances where the Russian leadership would be willing to participate in a peace enforcement operation under U.S. command.

- If the answer is yes, we will need to explore arrangements based on NATO's Combined Joint Task Force concept which would provide us with the certainty we need on political control issues but would give the Russians an arrangement they can live with (i.e., avoid the appearance of Russian subordination to NATO).

- If the answer is no, we will need to work with the Russians to identify so-called parallel tasks which fall outside IFOR's core peace enforcement mission but could be assigned to Russian military or civilian personnel.

- Clearly, creating workable arrangements for any Russian role should not be allowed to compromise IFOR's effectiveness and should meet the requirements laid down in PDD-25.

Political Oversight Issues.

You should be prepared for the Russians to insist on a role in political oversight/control of the IFOR, perhaps via the Security Council or as one of the great power guarantors of any overall peace settlement. While we plan to push for a UN mandate for the IFOR (which will require Russian help or acquiescence), the Russians will need to understand that the only political oversight we can live with would be via the North Atlantic Council. Still, it is conceivable we could create a Russian consultative arrangement with the NAC on a 16+1 basis which might assuage some of their concerns.

Structuring the Russian Contribution:

We have developed several models for Russian engagement in overall settlement implementation which, if properly fleshed out, could create a significant Russian role in the operation. We will need to have realistic expectations about what may be achievable, given Russia's chronic allergy to NATO.

Russians in the Chain

Model One: NATO Command under CJTF-type Label

If the Russians want a direct role in the IFOR and can accept U.S., but not NATO command, a CJTF-type command structure might be more palatable. The CJTF commander, in this case Adm. Smith, would be given opcon of the Russian units assigned to the IFOR. The Russians presumably would want to make it clear that their troops were subordinated to Smith in his capacity as Commander, Multi-National Force Bosnia, rather than in his NATO role (i.e., AFSOUTH). Political oversight of the CJTF would still come from the NAC, which could establish a special consultative arrangement with the Russians in Brussels. The Russian political role probably would need to be circumscribed to minimize possible interference in operational decisionmaking. The CJTF commander could readily draw on NATO support structures. It would be a NATO operation except in name. The Russians could have a senior military representative as a sub-commander in the CJTF structure, ideally charged with a non-combat function.

Model Two: A Coalition of the Willing

This would be modeled on DESERT STORM, where the U.S. assembled and commanded forces contributed by NATO and other countries on an ad hoc basis. The Russians would place their forces under the operational control of the U.S. commander. This structure would have many of the advantages of a NATO operation, but would not technically meet the tentative Principals decision that IFOR must be "NATO-led." The principal difficulty is the question of who exercises political oversight. In Desert Storm, the U.S. had the ultimate say although we consulted with key Allies. In this case, a Coalition Troop Contributors Council could be created and attached to the NAC via a consultative arrangement. The council would also have representation at the military command headquarters. Russian civilian and military officials would be given prominent roles in the council. (As a separate matter, we would also need to secure access to NATO support assets.)

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Indirect Russian Involvement

Model Three: "Cut-Out" Role For the Russians, Emphasis on Parallel Tasks (Arms Control, Aid Distribution, etc.).

Moscow might be willing up front to focus its contribution on some of the so-called parallel tasks (e.g., arms control verification, distribution of humanitarian aid, resettlement, reconstruction, legal/dispute settlement issues, etc.) which we do not expect to assign to the IFOR. Drawing on our experience during the Gulf War with Polish and Czech units, we could develop a mechanism for associating the Russian troops and civilians assigned to these non-military tasks with the IFOR in a way that is politically palatable to Moscow but preserves NATO unity of command. Smaller NATO or neutral countries such as Finland and Ukraine might be tapped to augment the Russian role and to give it a multinational character. The Russian sector commanders would send liaison representatives to the IFOR HQ and the political superstructure which we expect will loosely coordinate non-IFOR activities. (As a separate issue, we need to look at ensuring a high-profile Russian role in this parallel structure.)

Model Four: OSCE Takes the Lead For Arms Control and Border Monitoring.

A variant of Model Three would be to set up a separate arms control/border monitoring function under OSCE. An OSCE body would be given loosely-defined oversight over this operation and would coordinate its activity with IFOR and the parallel political structure. Russians and others in the field would need to develop coordinating links with regional IFOR commanders and the parallel political structure. Russians could play a number of non-combat, leadership roles in such an effort, but the political leadership in Moscow might be resistant to being relegated to a secondary task along with smaller European states while NATO runs the peace enforcement mission.

Summary of Conclusions

1. Deputies met September 29 to discuss post-settlement implementation. They agreed to defer discussion of economic reconstruction.

2. On American participation in IFOR, Deputies reaffirmed that our first priority is to ensure the integrity of military operations, i.e. NATO-led operation, unity of command, no dual key. Deputies agreed, however, that Russian participation in the IFOR was desirable. Deputies agreed that:

- we would prefer that Russian forces be under NATO operational control as part of one or more Allies' Area of Responsibility (AOR), rather than in a separate Russian AOR;
- we would prefer that, within the Allied AOR(s), Russian forces be given specific functional responsibilities.

3. Deputies agreed in principle to a fallback position of allowing the Russians to report to Deputy IFOR Commander Janvier in his dual-hatted capacity as Deputy UN Force Commander, upon assurances that Janvier does not have an independent reporting line to the UN regarding military matters. However, before broaching this with the Russians, we need to study further what was needed to ensure unity of command and no "dual key" under the Janvier option (Action: OSD/JCS). Based on that study, we would sound out the UN about the viability of this option (Action: USUN/State). Deputies agreed to postpone military talks between the JCS (Clark) and his Russian military counterpart, in light of the proposed Perry-Grachev meeting.

4. In view of Allied preferences for a stronger UN role in the implementation of the civilian aspects of the peace settlement, Deputies agreed we should define what constraints would be needed to define a narrow scope of responsibility and avoid organizational inefficiency in the event we agreed that the UN SYG could appoint the Senior Coordinator (Action: State/USUN).

5. With regard to the stabilization package, Deputies accepted a two-stage approach to arms control, i.e., the peace agreement would contain limited arms control measures (separation zones, continued no-fly zone) and a commitment by the parties to follow-on negotiations to establish equal ceilings on CFE categories of equipment. Deputies also recommended that the Principals look again at the equip and train decision. They agreed to prepare two options addressing a modest and a robust degree of U.S. engagement in equipping and training the Federation, in the context of a clearly defined end-state for the equip and train effort (Action: State). Based on the assumptions in the JCS paper on equipping and training the Federation, the deputies asked JCS to prepare a paper regarding how to implement an equip and train program (Action: JCS). The deputies also decided to defer sending an assessment team to the Federation at this time.

Summary of Conclusions

Russian Participation in IFOR

1. Deputies discussed options for Russian involvement in the peace implementation force (IFOR), in preparation for Secretary of Defense Perry's October 8 meeting with Russian Minister of Defense Grachev in Geneva. They reaffirmed that our first priority is to ensure the integrity of military operations, i.e., NATO-led operation, unity of command and no dual key. The Deputies agreed upon the following principles:

- Participation in IFOR means acceptance of NATO operational control (OPCON) or tactical control (TACON);

- All other options regarding relations with IFOR will be characterized as "cooperation with" IFOR;
- Under all options, Russia should not have a separate zone in the Theater of Operations, e.g., we should oppose Russian deployments exclusively in Bosnian Serb areas;
- The option of Russian units operating in support of IFOR under Russian national command is only acceptable if Russian forces are limited to non-core functional tasks;
- The option of Russian units in support of IFOR under a UN chain of command and reporting to the UN Senior Implementation Coordinator is acceptable if Russian forces are limited to non-core functional tasks and if safeguards exist against any backdoor UN interference in IFOR military decisions (no dual key);
- Only the NAC makes decisions for and provides political guidance to the IFOR;
- The Ad Hoc Planning Coordination Group or any other NATO fora established to include non-allied participants will only consult, advise and/or inform the NAC but not make decisions with or for the NAC;
- NATO meetings at 16-plus-Russia are desirable as an additional confidence-building measure but only to consult, advise and/or inform the NAC; and
- Russia will not have any veto over relations with or participation in IFOR by other non-Allies. ~~(S)~~

2. The Deputies agreed in principle that other non-allied participants could cooperate with IFOR under the above principles, but caution should be exercised. ~~(S)~~

IFOR Role During Elections

3. Deputies were skeptical that IFOR should assume direct responsibility for providing security during elections in Bosnia. They expressed general agreement with the conclusion in the JCS paper that IFOR would help create secure conditions for elections by completing its primary tasks: deploying forces to establish presence and separation between warring factions; enforcing the zones of separation and negotiated boundaries; and enforcing the withdrawal of forces to their respective territories within an agreed period. They deferred a formal decision, however, pending discussions with the U.S. negotiating team. ~~(S)~~

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

UN Role in Civilian Aspects of Implementation

4. On the appointment of a senior official to coordinate the civilian aspects of peace implementation, the Deputies agreed that we continue to prefer that the Senior Implementation Coordinator (SICOR) be appointed as part of the peace settlement, with enhanced international authority conferred by the UN Security Council. Deputies agreed that we may ultimately need to accommodate the position of our Allies and the Russians that the SICOR be appointed by the UNSC or the UN Secretary General but deferred a decision on this question. ~~(S)~~

Military Stabilization Plan

5. Following up on the October 4 Principals Committee meeting, Deputies endorsed both the State-developed arms control package and the OSD military assistance package. Deputies reaffirmed that the military assistance package would be subject to modification following a visit by an assessment team. They agreed that JCS should draft a charter for the assessment team immediately and be prepared to send the team in the next two weeks, assuming that the cease-fire has taken effect (Action: JCS). Deputies also agreed to the JCS suggestion that, in order to improve the effectiveness of the assistance package, we consider increasing efforts to strengthen the Federation's joint command. (Action: State/JCS) ~~(S)~~

EO 13526 1.4b, 1.4(d) Participation in IFOR (or in cooperation with)

Note: Under all options, peace agreement would establish basic structure of military and civilian implementation, UN would endorse agreement and authorize NATO, UN agencies, and other international institutions to implement it. [redacted] would participate in "Consultative Group" (including CG, other nations with major participation, OIC, EU, OSCE, NATO, other institutions engaged in implementation.

Option I: [redacted] unit under NATO Tacon but National Command [redacted]

-- [redacted] units would be under the operational or tactical control of one of the divisions of IFOR, for instance, the French division. The IFOR division commander could assign tasks and provide direction to the [redacted] units, as spelled out in definitions of operational and tactical control. NEED SIMPLE SUMMARY STATEMENTS OF WHAT THESE TERMS MEAN TO NATO.

-- [redacted] retains national command authority over its units; can refuse to execute orders if that is national decision.

-- [redacted] unit performs either combat or support function.

-- [redacted] has liaison officers at every level of NATO command, beginning with a 3-star at SACEUR HQ, with additional liaison officers at level of IFOR Cdr (AFSOUTH), Land component cdr (ARRC), and Div commander.

-- [redacted] included in "Bosnia Military Implementation Committee" (along with representatives of other significant troop contributing countries) and at NATO HQ in Brussels in periodic [redacted] meetings to advise NAC on progress and problems of military implementation.

-- [redacted] pays costs of its units.

Option II: [redacted] units operate in support of IFOR but under full national command, with only liaison links to NATO-led IFOR

EO 13526 1.4b

-- [redacted] unit under full national command and control.

-- [redacted] unit performs support function only -- "functions that are important to overall effort, such as strategic lift or engineer tasks, but not so linked to operations of IFOR as to require unity of command." 1.4(b), 1.4(d) [redacted] ?

-- Liaison at all levels of NATO command chain, but no [redacted] participation in IFOR military command structure.

-- [redacted] unit liaises and coordinates with IFOR to avoid conflict/overlap, but no NATO officer has directive authority over [redacted] forces.

[redacted]

[redacted]

All on this page closed
under E.O. 13526 1.4(b) & 1.4(d)

-- [redacted] participates in overall political consultative committee, but not in Brussels-based Bosnia Military Implementation Committee.
-- [redacted] pays own costs.

Option III: [redacted] units operate in support of IFOR, but under a UN chain of command.

[redacted]

Note: CJCS would not include this option as a possibility.

-- Identical to Option II, except:
-- [redacted] unit reports to a UN military commander or to a UN civilian official, presumably the Special Coordinator.

[redacted]

Option IV: [redacted] carries out civilian implementation tasks, but does not participate with military units.

[redacted]

-- No [redacted] military role in implementation.
-- [redacted] active in civilian-side implementation, in Consultative Committee

[redacted]

Comments

Option I

-- Preserves NATO Unity of command
-- May be hard to get GOBH to agree to a [redacted] geographical AOR
-- [redacted] all contributors) retains ultimate power to refuse to accept NATO orders.
-- [redacted] has political advisory voice alongside the NAC in Brussels through the Bosnia Military Implementation Committee and periodic 16 + 1 consultations. It also has a place in the broader Consultative Group. To the degree this political voice is sufficiently meaningful to meet [redacted] concerns, it risks diluting NAC authority.
-- No UN military command element.

Option II

-- [redacted] not subordinate to NATO, but also no UN command.
-- Because of lack of unity of command, [redacted] functional military activities must be sufficiently separable that they can be carried out without unity of command.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

-- Must rely on [redacted] cooperation and liaison to avoid conflicts, no control authority over [redacted] units.

-- Even if its units are not under NATO command, [redacted] may insist on inclusion in arrangements for political consultation with troop contributors.

Option III

-- As Option II, except:
-- Distinctively UN operational authority over [redacted] forces.
-- Existence of a UN military element risk de facto dual key.

Option IV

-- Reflects judgment that the "circle cannot be squared," i.e., there is no role for [redacted] military that both preserves NATO unity of command over critical military task and [redacted] interest minimizing NATO control of [redacted] forces.

  - -- Prevent a [redacted] veto of the UNSCR needed to authorize a NATO IFOR.
  - -- Reach agreement on cooperative [redacted] participation in the NATO-led IFOR on terms preferred by, or acceptable to, the U.S. and NATO.

- Our strategy is primarily offensive, not defensive, and is designed to hold the U.S.-NATO line on: (1) A UN-authorized IFOR under NATO command and control; (2) No dual key; (3) Conventional OPCON/TACON relationships to NATO; (4) NATO ROE; (5) IFOR contributors pay their own way; and (6) Military effectiveness, force balance and sustainability as key requirements for non-NATO contributions.

- Our fall back position (s) will only be offered if [redacted] refuses to allow a [redacted] contingent to serve under NATO.

- If [redacted] has not issued final guidance for [redacted] participation in IFOR by Sunday, [redacted] may only be authorized to listen and not close a deal. In this case, the Geneva meeting will be our best opportunity to try and shape [redacted] decision.

- Although [redacted] real -- as opposed to rhetorical -- bottom line on IFOR is still unknown, its mightiest lever is its UNSC veto.

- But [redacted] also has weaknesses that suggest [redacted] concessions might be possible. We will try to trade subordination of a [redacted] contingent to NATO command for the appearance of [redacted] inclusion as an equal partner in the Bosnian IFOR political and military decision-making process.

- [redacted] will never be comfortable with and may not accept the subordination of its forces to NATO. Nevertheless, a good cosmetics job -- stopping well short of making [redacted] an honorary member of NATO for the duration of an IFOR in Bosnia or giving [redacted] more than an advisory political voice -- could tip the balance.

- Given domestic pressures and the [redacted] Administration's need for a visible and major role in Bosnia, the key is to find the right combination of [redacted] involvement in political-military decision making bodies for IFOR as an artful cover for NATO control of [redacted] forces.

- On the political front, we should emphasize that [redacted]:
  - -- Already has a seat on the UNSC which will provide the mandate for implementing the peace settlement in Bosnia.

-- Would have a seat on the Consultative Group which will include the Contact Group, other major participating nations, and institutions engaged in implementation, such as OIC, EU, OSCE and NATO.

-- Would have a seat on the Bosnia Military Implementation Committee alongside the NAC in Brussels, and -- Would have periodic consultations at 16+1 with the NAC.

• On the military front, emphasis should be placed on:

-- [redacted] retention of national command authority over its units and right to withdraw or refuse to execute orders.

-- [redacted] liaison officers at every level of NATO command, including SACEUR HQ (a 3 star), IFOR Commander (AFSOUTH), Land Component Commander (ARRC) and Division Commander.

-- The need for a senior [redacted] officer be sent to Mons as soon as possible for discussions with SACEUR on command arrangements, mission allocation, force deployments, areas of responsibility, and financial obligations.

• Fiscal constraints could curb [redacted] appetite for a prominent [redacted] role and/or strengthen his insistence on a UN IFOR. It remains to be seen how large a contingent [redacted] can afford and is prepared to field to secure the major role it wants in IFOR. The [redacted] has informally hinted the [redacted] contribution will be smaller than the U.S. but [redacted] has said it could be a Division or less.

• On the other hand, if NATO could contract out functions such as helicopter resupply, mine clearing, road transportation etc., [redacted] might find it an attractive solution to the problem of financing its contingent of combat troops.

II. WHAT TO EXPECT FROM [redacted]

• Repetition of long-standing complaints that [redacted] is excluded from the process of Western decision making on security issues.

• Strong opposition to the fundamental concept of an IFOR under exclusive NATO command and control, tempered by [redacted] desire to be a major player in any Balkan settlement.

• Preference for a separate AOR placing [redacted] on an equal footing with the U.S., UK and France. [redacted] recent suggestion that a [redacted] division might be tendered to IFOR and [redacted] proposal for a joint NATO-[redacted] IFOR under alternating command also hint at a separate AOR. As the '94 Totskoye exercise demonstrated, [redacted] peacekeeping doctrine calls for national AORs.

• Little enthusiasm for a secondary role confined to combat support or combat service support operations -- whether in or outside IFOR.

• Insistence that the [redacted] military be treated as an equal partner and integral player in the process of designing IFOR command structures, allocation of missions, and national areas of responsibility.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

III. THE APPROACH TO [redacted]

• The [redacted] NATO dialogue on IFOR must begin soon and be carefully shaped. While U.S. leadership in this dialogue is vital, we must avoid reinforcing [redacted] perceptions that the U.S. dominates NATO decision making.

• SecDef's meeting with [redacted] will be most effective if clearly presented as the beginning of [redacted] involvement in the IFOR process and leading to direct negotiations between the [redacted] and NATO.

• Begin by outlining diplomatic progress toward a peace settlement and the various elements of the peace implementation plan. Particular care should be taken with two concepts the [redacted] will find particularly objectionable: the "even-handed but asymmetric approach" to possible serious violations of the peace settlement, and equipping and training the Bosnian Federation.

• [redacted] will more readily understand the IFOR structures for political guidance, national command and operational control if guided from the top down with a chart showing parallel and identical U.S. and [redacted] command chains on either side of the NATO OPCON chain, and political bodies in which [redacted] will have a seat.

• Following this presentation of general principles, [redacted] should be asked for his comments and views.

• SecDef should then outline the preferred U.S. position of full [redacted] integration within the NATO chain of command.

SENIOR IMPLEMENTATION COORDINATOR: SCOPE OF RESPONSIBILITIES IF APPOINTED BY U.N. SYG

This paper discusses what constraints would be needed to define a narrow scope of responsibility and avoid organizational inefficiency in the event the USG agreed that the U.N. Secretary-General could appoint the Senior Implementation Coordinator ("SICOR"). The attached paper ("Senior Implementation Coordinator: Alternatives for Appointment") describes the range of alternatives for appointment of the SICOR, including our preferred one (Option (2)) that would avoid having to build in the constraints described below, as well as Option (5) which lists some of the constraints in the event the U.N. SYG appoints the SICOR.

An important caveat is the fact that constraining the SICOR in some of the ways discussed below would be unprecedented in U.N. practice and probably a non-starter with our allies and the Russians on the Security Council and with the Secretary-General, who would want his "representative" to exercise certain authority on his behalf. Our allies and the Russians are proposing a U.N. appointment in order to grant the SICOR a substantial oversight role with U.N. authority. Trying to cripple that authority with constraints of the following character may be a futile exercise.

Possible Constraints on the SICOR:

- Require reports to the U.N. SYG either at the discretion of the SICOR or at lengthy intervals (e.g., semi-annually or annually).

- Define the SICOR's responsibilities as limited to coordinating only the work of U.N. agencies in the field. (This would open the possibility for a second coordinator appointed outside the U.N. system to work with the larger number of non-U.N. agencies, regional organizations, and NGO's in the field. However, there would have to be some coordination between the coordinators.)

- Explicitly prohibit the SICOR from taking any action relating to the IFOR. Nonetheless, it may be desirable for the SICOR to consult with the IFOR Commander with respect to non-military matters that intersect with the operation of the IFOR, but without any authority to impede IFOR operations. (The Europeans and Russians press this pragmatic point, not as a dual key proposal, but rather for efficient coordination of non-military affairs.)

• Require the SICOR to consult closely and regularly with the Contact Group or settlement (CG+) group and either to follow guidance from such group or take its recommendations into account in his work.

• Dilute the SICOR's direct authority by enhancing the overall authority of the proposed "Senior Coordination Committee," which might report to the Contact Group or settlement group rather than to the U.N. The numerous functions envisaged for the various committees described in the "Implementation Structure" paper could be undertaken by the Senior Coordination Committee, with only a limited role to be played by the SICOR.

• Limit the SICOR's staff (secretariat) drastically, thus impeding his ability to act effectively. (The non-U.N. appointed de facto coordinator could be given adequate staff to operate effectively.) Further, or alternatively, ensure that the individual selected is of weak character. The objective would be to create a shell SICOR, and build up the capabilities of a non-U.N. appointed coordinator. (The model might be the peace negotiations themselves, in which the U.N.-appointed SICOR is like another Bildt or Stoltenberg, and the non-U.N. appointed coordinator is like Holbrooke.)

SENIOR IMPLEMENTATION COORDINATOR: ALTERNATIVES FOR APPOINTMENT

The options below are in order of increasing international involvement, especially by the United Nations. Although the following refers to the appointment of the Senior Implementation Coordinator (SICOR), other governments have spoken of a "Special Representative" or "High Representative" of the U.N. Secretary-General or simply of the United Nations. The use of "SICOR" thus reflects our own preference rather than a term accepted by other governments.

Any of the following options could provide for consultations with the states pursuing a settlement and with the parties. In no option is it contemplated that the SICOR would have any explicit oversight, shared authority, or control over the military Implementation Force (IFOR). Nonetheless, the greater the U.N. role in selecting and employing the SICOR, the more likely situations will arise that encourage U.N. interference in IFOR-related activities through the work of the SICOR.

(1) Peace Settlement.

In the peace settlement, the parties would appoint the SICOR by name or would establish a process for appointing the SICOR, for example, by designating an institution or group of states to name the SICOR. The preferred group of states would be the Contact Group or the Contact Group plus additional interested states comprising a "Settlement Group."

This is the minimum necessary. This process ensures that the SICOR enjoys the trust of the parties and of states most involved in the negotiation and implementation of a settlement. The authority and profile of the SICOR would be limited, however, to that conferred by the parties themselves (or the appointer); the SICOR might lack influence with international bodies implementing the settlement, but he would not be imposed by an outside entity.

(2) Peace Settlement, Approved by U.N. Security Council.

The SICOR could be appointed as in Option (1), with enhanced international authority conferred by the Security Council. The Council might direct other states and organizations (especially UN organizations) to cooperate with the SICOR or it might more generally bless the arrangements reached by the parties.

This has been our preferred approach in discussions with NATO allies and the Russians. Even a minimal Security Council imprimatur could increase the SICOR's profile and persuasive powers. The Council might, however, insist on some ongoing involvement with the SICOR (that he/she report regularly, that the Council exercise authority to instruct the SICOR) as a price for its approval.

After lengthy and contentious discussion at the September 29 NAC meeting (USNATO 3822), a compromise was reached describing the SICOR in a manner that largely conforms to our preferred approach:

> (15) Agreed that, in planning for the operation of an IFOR, NATO authorities should assume that a peace agreement will be the subject of a resolution of the United Nations Security Council, which could grant authority for civilian implementing tasks to a High Representative in theatre whose responsibility would be, without in any way interfering in the conduct of military operations or the chain of command, to monitor the overall implementation of the peace plan.

A more detailed discussion of our preferred approach is attached as Annex I.

(3) Security Council Blessing, with intermediary.

In option (2), the SICOR has a direct line to the Council. In order to reduce the likelihood of Security Council involvement in the SICOR's work, it may be desirable to place an intermediary organization between the SICOR and the Council, whether the Council directly appoints the SICOR or the SICOR is appointed by such intermediary or solely in the peace agreement (option (1)). The intermediary could provide political guidance in much the same way as we now envisage the Ad Hoc Planning Group in Brussels providing advice to NATO relating to the IFOR.

Options for the intermediary include:

- An ad hoc settlement group (e.g., Contact Group plus). This offers the most control for the states involved and would include the states most concerned about maintaining political involvement. It may be difficult to persuade the Security Council, however, to cede appointment authority entirely to such a group even if most members are themselves Council members.

- The OSCE. The OSCE's appointment process may be slow and difficult to control, particularly for an institution of such large membership operating on consensus. The OSCE itself is one of the organizations with which the SICOR will coordinate, and the SICOR's authority may be diminished by suspicions of other such organizations.

• The International Conference on the Former Yugoslavia (ICFY). The ICFY is already established, well-known, and has a tradition of involvement in the former Yugoslavia, including appointments of personnel for monitoring and periodic reports to the U.N. SYG. In this case, the SICOR could report annually or perhaps semi-annually through the ICFY co-chairmen to the United Nations and the European Union. This would blunt the direct reporting requirement to the Council and thus diminish direct Council involvement.

--The SICOR could be appointed in any one of several methods. (1) The ICFY co-chairmen could appoint the SICOR following consultations with interested parties and in accordance with the peace agreement. (2) The settlement group could appoint following consultations with the UN and NATO SYG's and with blessing from the Security Council. (3) The U.N. SYG could appoint based upon the recommendation of the NATO SYG and perhaps the settlement group; but the responsibilities of the SICOR then would be delegated to ICFY to oversee. (This would have the added advantage of appointment by essentially the two SYG's, granting automatic status with international agencies.)

--Funding for the work of the the SICOR could be the same as for ICFY funding.

(4) Security Council Appointment.

In consultations and NAC debates, the French, British, and Russians have referred to appointment "by the Security Council" or "the United Nations." The Germans, Italians, and Spanish also have voiced strong support for a direct U.N. appointment of the SICOR. The parties could invite the Council to appoint the SICOR, presumably after consultations.

However, direct appointment by the Security Council of a U.N. "High Representative" (or "Special Representative") would be unorthodox. The traditional method is appointment by the U.N. Secretary-General followed by endorsement from the Security Council (see Option (5) below). We do not believe the Europeans are stuck on an initial Council appointment; they surely would settle for appointment by the SYG and endorsement by the Council. Only the French appear to be explicitly speaking of a direct Council appointment and presumably would settle for a direct SYG appointment.

The difficulty with any direct SYG or Council appointment is the likelihood of, at a minimum, a reporting requirement (probably periodic and perhaps frequent) to the SYG or Council. (If the SICOR reports to the SYG, the latter transmits the report to the Council for its attention.) Since the SICOR would be the representative of the United Nations, he necessarily would be expected to report to the body he represents. He also would be expected to follow guidance from the United Nations.

In practice, the reporting requirements of a Special Representative of the SYG (namely, SICOR) automatically will seize the Council with whatever is contained in the reports, thus triggering Council action. Such action could include a Presidential Statement noting the delivery of the report and its contents or a Council resolution mandating some action in response to the report. This will offer Russia and others ample opportunity to intervene regularly in the affairs of the SICOR and attempt to do so with IFOR. Our goal has been to minimize Council involvement.

(5) Appointment by the Secretary General and Endorsement by the Security Council.

This is the customary means of appointment, and the one clearly preferred by the Europeans and Russia.

It may be of some significance that the U.N. Secretary-General did not suggest in his letter of September 18 to the Security Council that he had any interest in appointing the SICOR. Rather, he wrote of the Council authorizing an "ad hoc coalition of Member States, acting as appropriate with regional organizations or arrangements, to support all aspects of implementation of the agreement, with the exception of those relating to the relief and return of refugees and displaced persons which should continue to be entrusted to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees." The SYG's insistence on reducing U.N. expenses suggests that he may not be interested in an extensive U.N. role.

The SYG's formulation implicitly grants considerable flexibility to an arrangement for the SICOR, provided the UNHCR and other U.N. specialized agencies is "entrusted" to discharge its responsibilities. However, we learned in our discussions in Europe recently that some of our NATO allies and Russia do not accord much weight to the SYG's views on this matter.

Appointment of the SICOR by the Secretary-General and endorsement by the Security Council invites the Secretary-General and the Security Council to have ongoing involvement with the SICOR and key aspects of the peace implementation plan, particularly as a consequence of the reporting requirement that would be mandated. They would be tempted to express views about or even object to IFOR military activities. We could reduce the risks associated with this by:

- requiring reports either at the discretion of the SICOR or at lengthy intervals;

- explicitly limiting SICOR's mandate in such a way that the role of the United Nations is minimized;

- including in the Council resolution urging or endorsing appointment of the SICOR a request that interested states remain involved in the implementation of a peace settlement; and/or

- urging the SICOR to work in consultation with (or in coordination with) such interested states.

The final two conditions were used in the appointment of the Secretary-General's Special Representative for Liberia.

(6) The Uniting for Peace Model Using the General Assembly

The peace agreement could point to the General Assembly, rather than the Security Council, as the "authorizing" U.N. body. The General Assembly either could establish a semi-independent operation or designate the ICFY or institutionalized settlement group as the body through which the SICOR would operate and from which he/she would receive guidance. Appointment of the SICOR could be on nomination of the U.N. Secretary-General with approval of the Contact Group or settlement group. As with the UN command in Korea, the SICOR could report annually (or perhaps semi-annually) through the U.N. Secretary-General to the General Assembly. Funding for the work of the SICOR could be either through the United Nations or by voluntary contributions. Because the SICOR would be appointed by the U.N. SYG, he/she would have automatic status with international agencies.

One key advantage to this option is that it bypasses the enforcement authority of the Security Council. Reports would be delivered to the General Assembly, which could not adopt binding resolutions pertaining to the work of the SICOR. It also continues to engage the U.N. SYG and vest U.N. authority in the SICOR.

The downside is that it ties the SICOR to both the U.N. SYG and the General Assembly, thus leaving a heavy U.N. imprint on the SICOR and inviting intrusive U.N. behavior. The General Assembly can prove obstructionist in the debates and resolutions that often seize the body in connection with controversial matters. It also has been reluctant recently to endorse initiatives seen as Security Council (and this would still include Council involvement) calls on U.N. resources. In the long term, this arrangement could cause the General Assembly to get involved in security issues across-the-board that we would rather reserve to the Security Council.

POLITICAL IMPLEMENTATION STRUCTURE

MODEL FOR THE SENIOR IMPLEMENTATION COORDINATOR

SOURCE OF AUTHORITY

* The peace settlement would establish the position of Senior Implementation Coordinator ("SICOR"), with authority to coordinate the implementation of political aspects of the settlement.

  - Parties to the settlement would include the Bosnian sides (Federation, Republic, and Serb entity or its representatives). The mandate should also be endorsed by the Governments of Croatia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, and Serbia/Montenegro.

* The usual U.N. models for appointing U.N. representatives (whether called special representatives, envoys, coordinators, or by other titles) do no apply.

  - The mandate to be implemented in Bosnia would be set by the parties and the Contact (or settlement) Group, not a U.N. body. The SICOR's authority should be derived from the mandate that matters, i.e., the peace settlement, preferably amplified by endorsement of the Security Council.

  - U.N. representatives generally carry out discretionary functions entrusted to the Secretary-General by the Security Council or the General Assembly. (The majority of high level representatives are appointed to carry out the Secretary-General's functions in Council-authorized peacekeeping operations. Other representatives help the Secretary-General in the exercise of his good offices or related functions. The rest assist the Secretary-General in the discharge of his responsibilities.)

  - In the Bosnian settlement, the Secretary-General will not be directed to undertake functions requiring the assistance of a U.N. representative.

  - In the past, U.N. representatives have been appointed in cases where either (1) the U.N. is engaging in a conflict with a heavy hand by establishing a peacekeeping operation or exercising enforcement powers; or (2) the SYG needs to dispatch his own envoy into an emerging conflict to practice preventive diplomacy. Neither of those cases applies in the Bosnian settlement. The U.N. is disengaging, primarily through the withdrawal of UNPROFOR, and authorizing a regional process supported by regional military power (NATO with some non-NATO) and a large array of regional and international organizations (some U.N., many non-U.N.).

* The SICOR would not have any authority over the military Implementation Force (IFOR).

- U.N. representatives appointed to carry out peacekeeping operations typically oversee the police and military aspects of the peacekeeping operation as well as undertake a variety of political functions. In light of the military role played by Special Representative for former Yugoslavia, it wold be difficult for the SYG to create a successor position that holds no such authority.

- Military authority would no be relevant to the mandate of the SICOR. Also, the Bosnian settlement will not be a U.N. peacekeeping operation.

APPOINTMENT

* The SICOR should have the full confidence of the parties and the Contact (or Settlement) Group.

- He will be charged with a mandate they establish, in coordination with bodies they comprise or designate.

* Appointment by the Contact (or Settlement) Group (or perhaps by the ICFY acting upon the nomination of the Contact (or Settlement) Group), in consultation with the parties, therefore may be the most appropriate vehicle.

- We believe that the parties will permit the Contact (or Settlement) Group to select from candidates acceptable to them.

- The U.N. and NATO Secretary-Generals should be consulted prior to the appointment. We would expect that the candidate should be acceptable to both Secretary-Generals in order to enhance his international legitimacy and to be able to effectively discharge his duties.

* The Security Council could approve the Contact (or Settlement) Group's recommendation for the SICOR.

(11)

- Such Council approval or endorsement would attach greater international legitimacy on the SICOR.

- This would augment the SICOR's influence with U.N. agencies operating in Bosnia.

- The Council has approved the use of regional mediators or negotiators in other circumstances.

REPORTING

* The SICOR should not be required to report to the Secretary-General or the Security Council except at his or her discretion.

* Regular, periodic reports are often required of U.N. representatives. They are, however, tied to the responsibilities of the Secretary-General or the Security Council.

- For example, reports are required to inform the Council before peacekeeping mandates expire.

- In the Bosnian settlement, the SICOR should report to the Contact (or Settlement) Group which could provide each such report to the Security Council for its information.

- But there should be no procedure established with compels either the Secretary-General or the Security Council to receive reports and then comment or act upon them in a supervisory capacity. Any such procedure would contradict the devolution of authority represented by the Council's authorization of IFOR and endorsement of the SICOR.

STABILIZATION PACKAGE IN A BOSNIAN SETTLEMENT: CBMS/ARMS CONTROL

Our CBM/Arms Control package would consist of four basic elements which could be captured, in varying degrees of specificity, in the settlement agreement itself.

I. Basic Commitments to Principles and Processes

Our first objective is to establish within the settlement agreement itself a codification of commitments by the parties that would establish certain basic goals, principles, processes and timelines for a multi-stage confidence-building/arms control process, one that would lead from initial steps to increasingly ambitious measures. To that end, the settlement agreement would include language not simply on future non-use of force but on long-term goals of military reductions and elimination of destabilizing asymmetries of military forces.

II. Cessation of Hostilities Agreement - Immediate Measures

Our second stage objectives would deal with issues immediately related to separation of forces and stabilization that must be addressed as soon as the agreement is concluded. It might include the following components (with corresponding language) in the Ceasefire and Cessation of Hostilities Agreements:

-- Exchange of prisoners provisions.

-- Compliance by all parties with the zones of separation and boundary lines between the opposing Parties (e.g., 1 km).

-- Ban on Bosnian Serb and Federation combat aircraft activity for at least one year.

-- Establishment of a Joint Military Commission and joint liaison/communication links at multiple levels between the IFOR and the Federation and Bosnian Serb Armies.

-- Declarations of kinds of military equipment and arms.

On deployment, IFOR will come face to face with the realities of the parties' degree of adherence to these measures. However, at a certain point (depending on safety constraints and at its discretion), IFOR might wish to transfer some of the basic interpositional and monitoring responsibilities to the OSCE and EUMM missions or some combination.

PER E.O. 13526

III. Expanding More Ambitious OSCE Confidence-Building Measures

In the third stage, the parties will be committed by the settlement agreement to work -- under the aegis and with the assistance of the OSCE -- toward a more ambitious CSBM's package. They would be committed to commence such negotiation within fifteen days of the settlement agreement with a goal of conclusion of an initial set of measures by forty-five/sixty days of settlement. The first focus should be on information exchange and contacts. The much tougher issues of data exchange on troop strength or movements would come later. These might include, for example:

-- Restrictions on deployments and exercises in certain sensitive areas, particularly within defined border regions;

-- Annual limits on the number of exercises above a fairly low threshold;

-- Annual limits on call-ups of reservists;

-- Limits on the number, size, and equipment of special operations and/or paramilitary units;

-- Reduction of arms stockpiles;

-- Ban on certain military activities-exercises in selected areas or region-wide, or, a notification regime of such planned activities exceeding a certain threshold.

The OSCE role will be that of framework and facilitator for such negotiations among the parties; its full membership would not be directly involved beyond lending generalized political support to this process. A specific individual -- either a senior personal representative of the Chairman-in-Office, the OSCE Secretary General or the head of its Conflict Prevention Center -- might be designated to organize, lead and broker such negotiations.

The OSCE has already begun preparing for such CSBM's in Bosnia and is planning for an active OSCE role within days of settlement. State will be working closely with OSCE through our delegation to ensure this process continues in a direction that supports the settlement.

DRAFT

IV. Moving to CFE-type Arms Control Limits

Our fourth stage would be an effort to eliminate destabilizing assymetries in major CFE equipment categories. The parties would agree at settlement to begin within three months negotiations within the framework of OSCE leading to a CFE-like agreement. In the first instance, this would involve the parties within Bosnia itself. But it should also open the possibility for a follow-on stage of negotiations on a more regional basis to include the "FRY" and Croatia. The objectives of this fourth stage would be establishment of region-wide CSBMs and, if possible, simple CFE-type caps on certain categories of equipment.

In the event the settlement negotiations offer an opportunity to negotiate more specific language on a caps regime, it should include an element of build-down. For example, in might include a commitment by the parties to accept the following caps at settlement (all numbers illustrative) for each side in Bosnia alone on the following categories of equipment as defined in the CFE agreement would include build-down:

(1)	Battle Tanks	250
(2)	Armored Combat Vehicles	250
(3)	Artillery	1,700
(4)	Combat Aircraft	25
(5)	Combat Helicopters	10

Another component of build-down, however, might include a suppliers agreement in the context of the equip and train effort. Potential suppliers might agree to a consortium (like the Australia Group) to restrict arms sales of offensive-use only kinds of weaponry to the Bosnian sides. It might also insist that recipients of their equipment destroy old/current equipment in amounts equal or greater to new equipment received; this might go in the direction of some build down proposals.

Sustaining a Peace Agreement in Bosnia

Military Stabilization Measures (U)

Background (S): International efforts to negotiate peace in the former Yugoslavia are more likely to result in an enduring peace if (1) the Bosnian Muslim - Bosnian Croat Federation (the "Federation") has a military capability to defend itself against the Bosnian Serbs, (2) no party to the conflict significantly increases its offensive capabilities, and (3) measures are developed to reassure the parties as to each others' military actions and intentions. An approach is needed to balance militarily capabilities, limit the incentives and ability of all the parties to obtain offensive weapons, and institute confidence-building measures (CBMs). The USG will lead an international effort to provide military assistance to the elements of the Federation so they can develop a more viable defense vis-a-vis the Bosnian Serbs while also supporting basic measures designed to avoid an arms race and reduce tensions. The effort will also be designed to strengthen the internal cohesion of the Federation and avoid features which could detract from cooperation within the Federation.

Arms Embargo (S): A premise of this paper is that the arms embargo and economic sanctions currently in place for the former Yugoslavia will be lifted by UN Security Council action in connection with the peace agreement. This will enable efforts to improve the Federation's self-defense capabilities, but also opens the door for additional arms flows to the Bosnian Serbs and could permit an unconstrained arms race in the region.

Military Balance (S): While the military balance in Bosnia and the Federation's specific needs will require a detailed assessment, including an in-country evaluation of Federation capabilities, enough information is now available to estimate the general needs and scale of effort required to enable a viable Federation defense:

- The Bosnian Serbs have an equipment advantage (~4:1 in tanks, ~10:1 in APCs, ~2:1 in artillery), whereas the Federation has a manpower advantage (2:1). Current equipment levels are at Tab A.
- Qualitatively, the Federation has an effective light infantry force able to defend against most Bosnian Serb attacks, but its military effectiveness is limited by equipment shortages, poor tactical and operational leadership skills, and by a lack of operational coordination between Muslims and Croats.
- The Bosnian Serbs have shown better organizational skills, but are constrained by manpower shortages and low morale.

Both sides have good skills in conducting defensive operations from prepared positions. The resulting stalemates in many parts of the country and, more recently, dynamic results on the battlefield attest to a modest imbalance in aggregate military capability between Federation and Bosnian Serb forces, with the Bosnian Serbs holding a particular advantage in mechanized capabilities. Recent Federation successes against the Bosnian Serb Army do not change this fundamental judgment, because they have been so dependent on Croatian efforts and support.

Security Assistance Program (S): Efforts to enhance Federation self defense capabilities will be limited to the minimum necessary to create a balance without stimulating an arms race. The approach will be to improve the elements of the Federation's defensive capabilities by enhancing one brigade within each corps (equivalent) of the Federation -- a total of ten (3-4 Bosnian Croat and 6-7 Bosnian Muslim) brigades. These ten enhanced brigades will provide each corps (equivalent) a mobile reserve. By dispersing the enhancements across the ten corps (equivalents) and limiting training to the lowest (unit) level, increases in Federation offensive capability will be minimized. All support will be provided directly to the elements of the Federation (Bosnian Croat, Bosnian Muslim) rather than to the Federation itself and will be provided in proportion to their parts of the Federation forces. Further, the effort will lay the groundwork for continuing mil-to-mil contacts with US and other moderate nations, contributing to stability. The estimates below will be revised if necessary, once a comprehensive in-country assessment is conducted.

- Training. Training will be focused on defensive tactics, techniques and procedures to attain proficiency at the platoon level. Additionally, leader training in defensive planning and execution will be provided at company, battalion and brigade levels. The effort will require about 1,500 trainers and about seven months to accomplish. The in-country trainers will be principally USG contractor personnel and military personnel from nations not involved in IFOR operations.
- Equipment. Each of the ten mobile brigades will receive 10 APCs, 20 tanks, 18 howitzers, 15 mortars, a mix of air defense missiles and guns, antitank weapons, and small arms. For ease of integration, principally former WP equipment will be provided. The total major equipment to be provided to the Federation will be:

Equipment	Type(s)	Quantity
Tanks	T-72	200
APCs	BTR-60	100
Howitzers	122mm	180
Mortars	82/120 mm	270 (150/120)
MANPAD missiles	SA-7/16	50
Light AD guns	ZSU-23	60
Antitank Weapons	T-12 100mm	60
Rocket Launcher	128mm	60
Recoilless Rifle	82mm	60
Small Arms	AK-47	10,000

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

- Cost. Preliminary estimates indicate a likely cost of $385M: $353M for equipment, $12M for training, $14M for operations, and $6M for transportation.

Arms Control Measures (S): The goal of arms control is to prevent an arms race in the wake of the removal of the arms embargo. Simple caps on the inventory of major weapons with offensive potential, limiting the Federation and the Bosnian Serbs each to the inventory level of the higher of the two parties in each category of weapons at the time of settlement, are likely to be all that we can achieve in the context of the peace agreement. More complex arrangements can then be pursued as the peace matures.

Confidence Building Measures (S): The peace agreement will contain provisions to enable both political and military dialogue between the parties to permit the resolution of differences before they escalate, including the establishment of a Joint Military Commission. Further, the agreement could contain provisions for the exchange of advance information concerning military exercises and force movements. Specific information to be exchanged could be agreed between the military leaders of the parties after the peace agreement has been signed.

Action (S): The USG will undertake the following actions to achieve stabilization of the peace agreement (lead agency as indicated):

- Subject to the negotiators' sense of acceptability to the parties, strive to include in the agreement the following stabilization features (State):
  --Caps on the numbers of selected categories of major weapon systems (e.g., Ground Attack aircraft, tanks, surface-surface missiles, artillery)
  --Parties agree not to accept security assistance from radical/pariah parties.
  --Establishment of a joint military commission to resolve disputes.
  --Parties to exchange information concerning major military movements and exercises.
- Obtain unconditional multilateral removal of the arms embargo and lifting of economic sanctions agains the Former Yugoslavia. (State)
- Seek agreement and support from key allies for the US approach. (State)
- Organize a coalition of willing nations to provide security assistance (equipment and training) to the Federation. Contributions of funding, equipment, and trainers will be needed. (State)
- Obtain Croatian agreement to permit unobstructed passage and not to interfere with the US-led effort. (State)
- Upon cessation of hostilities, conduct an in-country assessment to confirm the Federation's security needs. (JCS)
- Using intermediaries if necessary, seek at least tacit agreement from Serbia and Croatia to limit their support to their clients in Bosnia to items which will not adversely affect the balance or undermine the US effort. (State)

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

- Seek Congressional support and funding for the effort. (State)
- Conduct the security assistance program commencing on signature of the peace agreement and completing within twelve months thereafter. (JCS/DSAA)

Summary of Conclusions

Russian Relationship with IFOR

1. Deputies discussed options for Russian involvement within a multilateral, political framework for Bosnian peace implementation, in preparation for meetings in Moscow. Drawing on a State memorandum, Deputies agreed to study further the following option:

- A coalition of forces on the Desert Storm model. A UN resolution would request "interested states and appropriate regional organizations" to undertake implementation. The coalition could be limited to the military implementation (which NATO would run) or could include civilian aspects as well.

The above option would build on NATO and PFP structures to form a practical strategic partnership (a coalition) for implementation of the peace agreement. It would not alter our basic position that IFOR be under clear NATO command and control with exclusive political guidance from the NAC.

2. Deputies agreed that State should revise the discussion memo, as an internal U.S. government position, making the relationship to NATO decision-making bodies more clear and emphasizing NATO's final decision-making authority. In addition, Deputies agreed to include in the new State paper a set of "red lines" for use in negotiations in Moscow and to drop any reference to common funding (Action: State). ~~(S)~~

Strategy for London and Moscow Conferences on Implementation

3. Deputies reaffirmed that the President has not agreed to a signing of a peace agreement in Paris and that the location for signing a peace agreement was unresolved. The Deputies agreed that State would draft a "notional" sequencing and agenda for upcoming conferences that would include Paris, London, Moscow and a fourth signing event (Action: State). ~~(S)~~

Sanctions

4. Deputies reaffirmed that the negotiating team had no authority to offer interim sanctions relief to the FRY prior to signature of a peace agreement but that the option would be reviewed if requested by the negotiating team. ~~(S)~~

~~SECRET~~
DECL:OADR

TO: The Deputy Secretary

FROM: EUR - John C. Kornblum, Acting JCK

SUBJECT: A Multilateral Framework for Bosnian Peace Implementation

Many countries and agencies must be integrated into a structure for implementation of Bosnian peace accords. This includes complex civilian and military structures.

A number of models are imaginable. US interests include the following requirements:

-- Complete autonomy for NATO as the organizer of the IFOR.

-- An indirect link to the United Nations, without requirements for UN oversight of either the military or civilian components.

-- A means of integrating non-NATO participants, especially Russia, into the IFOR, on the basis of NATO command and control.

-- A credible central civilian implementation structure which does not become embroiled in the politics of the UN, the EU or other organization.

A UNIFYING STRUCTURE

There is a strong desire both among NATO allies and other possible participants in implementation, especially the Russians, to devise a unifying structure to manage the implementation. Three possibilities can be imagined:

-- Direct UN authorization and management, including a UN civilian administrator and a UN military commander.

PER E.O. 13526

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

-- A totally self-supporting structure which emerges from the peace agreement. The parties would agree to the structure and would agree on its international management. A variant would be to have the Contact Group serve in a sponsorship role.

-- A coalition of forces on the Desert Storm model. A UN resolution would request "interested member states and appropriate regional organizations" to undertake implementation. A multilateral coalition could be formed, perhaps at the meeting in London. The coalition could be limited to the military implementation or could cover civilian aspects as well.

ANALYZING THE OPTIONS

The first option is unacceptable to the United States and to most NATO allies. The UN seems uninterested in assuming this burden.

The second option would be most practical and efficient from an American point of view. The disadvantage would be that the framework would not be broad enough to provide a sense of participation for all countries and agencies who believe they have a legitimate role in Bosnia. There would be resentment by some countries at a special role for the Contact Group.

The third option offers a chance to establish a credible international structure which is separate from the United Nations, but still manageable by the US. It could be especially useful in meeting the needs of Russia and others for a role in IFOR.

A MULTILATERAL COALITION FOR IFOR

An example of a useful international coalition is the IFOR and the role of non-NATO participants. The structure could be designed as follows:

by name?

-- The Bosnian Peace Agreement establishes an implementation structure which includes an implementation force mounted by NATO and a civilian coordinator. An annex establishing this force as an integral part of implementation is attached to the peace agreement.

-- The UNSC issues a short resolution which approves the peace agreement and grants authority to "interested member states, acting with appropriate regional organizations or arrangements," to support all aspects of implementation. NATO is not mentioned in the resolution, but a UNSYG report states that NATO has agreed to take on the IFOR task.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

-- NATO would take the lead in organizing the IFOR coalition. It would conclude individual MOU's with interested states which would discuss mission, command and control and consultations. These MOU's would provide a process for determining each individual state's contributions. Details would be worked out with SHAPE.

-- The individual MOU's would include identical provisions for political and military coordination. These could include:

- Agreement that each participant would be able to approve the operational plan as a condition for contributions of forces to IFOR. NATO would promise to take account of views, but final judgment would be reserved to the NAC.

- Establishment of a Multilateral (or International) Coordinating Council: This would be a political body composed of NATO and senior officials from contributing countries. The NATO Secretary General would chair. This body would discuss overall policy and command and control issues arising from IFOR's operation.

- A Senior Military Council: This would be chaired by SACEUR and be composed of senior military representatives from NATO and contributing countries. It would be charged with reviewing military operations and consulting with contributing countries on issues which arise in the operation of IFOR. It would assume the duties of the current Ad Hoc Group.

- Command Liaison Arrangements: NATO would provide liaison arrangements with contributing countries at various staff levels. Details would be tailored to individual countries.

- Provision for a common funding mechanism could be added if desired.

ADDING A CIVILIAN ELEMENT

This structure could be expanded to cover the civilian implementation structure and the role of the Senior Implementation Coordinator (SICOR). Providing a "coalition" structure could help deal with the debate with the French and others over the need for a supervising structure for the SICOR.

Rather than being appointed by the UNSYG as the French wish, the SICOR could operate within the framework of the multilateral coalition. A coalition of countries could include OIC countries etc. who would sign a single MOU on overall implementation. THE SICOR's authority could come from the coalition agreement.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Existence of this "coalition" would also provide a framework for non-combat Russian military operations, if the Russians chose this course. Their forces could attached directly to a "security division" of the SICOR.

MEETING RUSSIAN NEEDS

Such a structure would help meet Russian needs in a number of ways:

-- It would include express UN authorization.

-- It would set up an intermediary structure between Russian and NATO which Russia could claim was the "real" IFOR authorizing body.

-- It would provide for an individual Russian agreement with NATO, preserving Russia's desire to be an "equal" partner with NATO in the IFOR.

-- It would provide for a direct role for SACEUR in the Senior Military Council, thus preserving for Russia the sense that they were dealing with SACEUR as a coalition commander rather than a NATO commander. (?)

-- It would provide both civilian and military consultative bodies to give Russia a chance to express its opinions on policy issues.

-- It would provide liaison opportunities in the NATO command structure.

-- If so desired, it could provide a common funding arrangement to help pay for the Russian contribution. (?)

-- If so desired, it could have a direct link to the civilian structure to allow Russia to relate its civilian and military roles. Russia could for example be given a senior post (deputy SICOR?) in the civilian structure to balance NATO's role in IFOR. Or, if Russia chose option II, its non-combat forces would still be part of the same coalition as the IFOR.

-- As a final point for Russia, we could agree informally that major policy issues would continue to be consulted with Contact Group partners in an informal CG forum established either at NATO or meeting regularly in capitals.

~~SECRET~~
DECL:OADR

OPTIONS FOR RUSSIAN RELATIONSHIP WITH IFOR

Principles which apply to options I and II only:

Peace agreement would establish basic structure of military and civilian implementation.

UNSC would endorse agreement and grant authority to NATO, UN agencies and other international institutions to implement it.

Units will be deployed and redeployed within theater based upon tasks which are assigned to them and not on the basis of permanently assigned zones of operation.

A senior implementation coordinator, with UN authorization, would coordinate implementation on the civilian side.

OPTION I: RUSSIAN UNITS UNDER NATIONAL COMMAND WITH OPERATIONAL CONTROL ("OPCON") OR TACTICAL CONTROL ("TACON") DELEGATED TO IFOR.

Russia retains national command authority over its units. Units may not be reorganized, resubordinated or disciplined without national concurrence.

Russian units under OPCON or TACON of one of the units of IFOR, for instance, the French division. The IFOR division commander could assign tasks and provide direction to the Russian units, as spelled out in agreed definitions of operational and tactical control.

Russian unit performs either combat or support function, depending on the types of forces assigned.

Russia has liaison officers at every level of NATO command, beginning with a 3-star at SACEUR HQ, with additional liaison officers at level of IFOR Cdr (AFSOUTH), Land component Cdr (ARRC), and Division commander.

Russia included in Bosnia Military Coordination Cell in Brussels (along with representatives of other significant troop contributing countries) to advise/consult/inform on deliberations of NAC, MC and other NATO bodies.

PER E.O. 13526
CIA Historical Collections Division
AR 70-14 10/1/2013
2013-0692-M (3.78)

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Russia also included in consultations at NATO HQ via periodic 16+1 meetings, but would have no veto over NAC decisions.

Russia pays costs of its units.

Terms of Reference to be developed between NATO and Russia will spell out additional details of the relationship.

OPTION II: RUSSIAN UNITS PERFORM FUNCTIONALLY SEPARATE NON-COMBAT TASKS UNDER FULL NATIONAL COMMAND, WITH ONLY LIAISON LINKS TO NATO-LED IFOR.

Russian units under full national command and control.

Russian units perform functions that are important to overall effort, such as strategic lift or engineer tasks, but not so linked to operations of IFOR as to require unity of command.

Russian units could coordinate with but would not be subordinate to NATO.

Liaison at all levels of NATO chain of command.

Russian units liaise and coordinate with IFOR to avoid conflict/overlap, but no NATO officer has directive authority over Russian forces.

Russia participates in Brussels-based Bosnia Military Coordination Cell as well as 16+1 consultations.

Russia pays own costs.

OPTION III: PROCEEDING WITHOUT RUSSIA

Russia does not participate in military implementation at all, in neither a combat nor support role.

If neither Option 1 or 2 is agreed to, we face a good chance for Russian obstructionism in the UNSC re a resolution granting authority for peace implementation and IFOR.

IFOR proceeds with a NATO-only mandate, possibly agreed to by the parties in the terms of settlement.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Allies modulate their IFOR participation (i.e., restrained use of force) according to the noise coming out of Moscow.

Other Russian actions are possible, but perhaps less likely:

Russians openly take sides with the "FRY" and Bosnian Serbs and offer weapons and economic assistance, in violation of embargo/sanctions.

Russian cooperation with the United States and with the Europeans deteriorates.

Russians decline to participate in non-IFOR implementation.

Obstructionism at OSCE encroaches effort to devise CBM regime.

POSSIBLE SEQUENCE OF INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCES ON BOSNIA

U.S.: Proximity talks to begin on October 31, lasting for approximately two weeks. To be attended by representatives of Contact Group countries, Carl Bildt and three Presidents Milosevic, Tudjman and Izetbegovic as heads of respective delegations. Goal: Reach and initial peace deal on constitutional and territorial issues.

Paris: International conference to be held late November/early ~~December, to be attended~~ by Foreign Ministers. Goal: Sign peace agreements.

London: International conference on implementation issues to be held early December, probably to be attented at Political Director level. Goal: Reach and announce agreements on the range of implementation issues, particularly reconstruction and humanitarian issues.

Moscow: Yet to be defined meeting on implementation issues. The British have suggested inclusion of arms control issues.

priorities, with a particular focus on items that will need to be factored into the terms of the peace agreement itself. Treasury reported on a three-part strategy to ease Bosnia's arrears problem: 1) develop a financial blueprint; 2) after agreement on a financial blueprint, have the World Bank coordinate pledging; and 3) implement support on the ground. (S)

2. Deputies agreed to establish an interagency working group to be chaired by State and co-chaired by AID and Treasury, to develop in one week, for Principals, an integrated, comprehensive strategy paper that outlines timelines, priorities, issues for upcoming negotiations and issues for immediate decision by Principals (Action: State/Treasury/AID). Deputies also agreed that the IWG would become a working subgroup of the soon to be established Balkan ExComm. (S)

IFOR/Unresolved Issues

3. Based on a review and discussion of a list of questions regarding IFOR's mission, deployment, area of operations and operational timing, Deputies identified several unresolved issues regarding mission creep, use of force, zones of separation, end states, required Presidential decisions, and the coordination of U.S. policy, negotiations, NATO decisions and military planning. Deputies agreed that JCS, State and NSC should revise the list and provide answers to the questions in order to identify critical unresolved issues regarding implementation of the peace plan before the end of the week for immediate Deputies' consideration (Action: JCS/State/NSC). SUBJECT: BUILDING DEMOCRACY IN BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA

1. ~~CONFIDENTIAL~~ - ENTIRE TEXT.

2. SUMMARY: PRIME MINISTER HARIS SILAJDZIC IS EXECUTING A MARGIN CALL. THE EMBASSY BELIEVES THAT THE SEED PROGRAM SHOULD BEGIN IMMEDIATELY TO INITIATE A DEMOCRACY BUILDING PROGRAM OF ASSISTANCE IN BOTH ENTITIES OF BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA. END SUMMARY.

3. DURING A SPECIAL SESSION OF THE SARAJEVO CITY COUNCIL ON SEPTEMBER 28, PRIME MINISTER SILAJDZIC GAVE A POSITIVE REPORT ON THE NEGOTIATIONS LEADING TO THE NEW YORK DOCUMENT ON FURTHER AGREED PRINCIPLES. SPEAKING IN FRONT OF LOCAL MEDIA, THE PRIME MINISTER SAID THE PRIMARY RESULT OF NEW YORK WAS TO DELINEATE THE CORE INSTITUTIONS OF THE STATE. THE MAIN BONE OF CONTENTION WAS THE CONDUCT OF ELECTIONS. THE ISSUE IS IMPORTANT, ACCORDING TO SILAJDZIC, BECAUSE THE WAR STARTED BECAUSE DEMOCRACY WAS FOREIGN TO THE BOSNIAN SERBS.

4. SILAJDZIC SAID THE U.S. HAD PROMISED TO GUARANTEE FREE AND DEMOCRATIC ELECTIONS--A PROMISE CRUCIAL TO THE GOBH DECISION TO ACCEPT THE NEW YORK TEXT. PURTHER, HE WAS HEARTENED BY PRESIDENT CLINTON'S STRONG STATEMENT OPPOSING ANY SECESSION. SILAJDZIC WAS CONCERNED ABOUT THE FATE OF DEMOCRACY IN AREAS WITHOUT A TRADITION OF HUMAN RIGHTS, BUT SAID HE WAS RELYING ON THE INTERNATIONAL COMMUNITY TO MONITOR THE HUMAN RIGHTS SITUATION THERE.

5. SILAJDZIC'S COMMENTS ARE BASED IN PART ON EMBASSY ARGUMENTS MADE TO BOTH SILAJDZIC AND IZETBEGOVIC THAT THE PRINCIPLES ESPOUSED IN 5.3 OF THE DOCUMENT PROVIDED AMPLE ROOM TO DEFEAT TOTALITARIANISM. WE REFERRED TO WORK DONE IN THE EARLY DAYS OF THE SEED PROGRAM IN BULGARIA AND, PARTICULARLY, IN ALBANIA TO PROMOTE DEMOCRATIC PLURALISM, FREE AND FAIR ELECTIONS, AND THE TRIUMPH OF DEMOCRACY. WE URGED PRESIDENT IZETBEGOVIC TO CALL THE RESPECTIVE PRESIDENTS TO CONFIRM OUR CLAIM FOR THE EFFICACY OF THE PROGRAM.

6. SILAJDZIC IS EXECUTING A MARGIN CALL. THE EMBASSY BELIEVES THAT THE SEED PROGRAM SHOULD BEGIN IMMEDIATELY TO INITIATE A DEMOCRACY BUILDING PROGRAM OF ASSISTANCE IN BOTH ENTITIES OF BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA.

7. THE PROGRAM SHOULD INCLUDE AN INITIAL ASSESSMENT MISSION (U.S. ORGANIZED, BUT NOT NECESSARILY U.S. LED). THE MISSION SHOULD VISIT THE FEDERATION FIRST AND, WHEN APPROPRIATE, THE SERB-HELD LANDS.

8. CENTRAL COMPONENTS OF A FOLLOW-UP PROGRAM SHOULD BE:
--PARTY ORGANIZATION, DEVELOPMENT, PROMOTION, AND TRAINING,
--ELECTION MONITORING,
--HUMAN RIGHTS MONITORING, AND
--DEVELOPMENT OF INDEPENDENT MEDIA, PRTICULARLY IN SERB AREAS.
9. THOUGH THE SEED PROGRAM HAS GENERALLY MOVED BEYOND THESE ACTIVITIES AS FREE AND FAIR ELECTIONS HAVE BEEN HELD, BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA SHOULD BE VIEWED AS A SPECIAL CASE. THE PROGRAM SHOULD RETURN TO ITS INITIAL APPROACH OF ASSISTING BROADLY-BASED DEMOCRATIC COALITIONS DEVELOP THE ABILITY TO PARTICIPATE IN ELECTIONS.

10. THE INSTRUMENTS TO PROVIDE SUCH ASSISTANCE ARE STILL IN PLACE--THE NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC INSTITUTE, THE INTERNATIONAL REPUBLICAN INSTITUTE, THE FREE TRADE UNION INSTITUTE, AND OTHERS.

11. BASED ON OUR EXPERIENCE IN THE AREA OF DEMOCRACY-BUILDING, WE ESTIMATE THE COST OF AN EFFECTIVE PROGRAM AT ROUGHLY TWO MILLION DOLLARS, FUNDED INCREMENTALLY. THE PROGRAM SHOULD BE MANAGED LOCALLY. WE BELIEVE THAT A DEMOCRACY-BUILDING PROGRAM FOR BOSNIA WILL HAVE AN ENORMOUS IMPACT ON THE OUTCOME OF ELECTIONS AND WILL ENSURE THAT THEY ARE DEMOCRATIC, AND HELP US REDEEM THE AMERICAN PROMISORY NOTE. Summary of Conclusions

IFOR/Unresolved Issues

1. Deputies reviewed and discussed a list of questions and answers (prepared by JCS in coordination with State, OSD and NSC) that addressed nine areas of concern regarding the implementation force (IFOR): mission, non-compliance, election security, deployment, area of operations, timing, exit, Congressional strategy, and public outreach. Deputies agreed that:

- JCS/NSC should develop a notional timeline reflecting a sequence of actions and decisions to be taken by the NAC, UNSC and other organizations, and the time of Presidential or lower level decisions prior to deployment of the IFOR (Action: JCS/NSC);

- Deputies reaffirmed that IFOR will not provide for civil order, and State should prepare a paper addressing the outstanding issues of establishing a police force and the implications for a peace settlement if no viable police force exists (Action: State);

- State should prepare a paper on a possible IFOR role in implementing a settlement in Eastern Slavonia, including any limitations we want to seek to place on the mission (Action: State);

- Russian forces should not have a separate zone; this and other aspects of Russian participation will be addressed separately.

- The IFOR will create secure conditions for elections by completing its primary tasks; the OSCE should be solicited as the lead organization in the electoral component of the overall implementation effort, including the responsibility for an election security plan (Action: State);

- There should be indicators of seriousness in the framework agreement that the parties should commit to fulfill between initialing and signature of the peace agreement, but their fulfillment would not be a precondition for rapid deployment of IFOR;

- Until we have a final peace agreement and final implementation plan, we will preserve our flexibility on the exact duration of the IFOR's mission while continuing to use 12 months as the planning figure;

- Entities firing from one territory to another across the zone of separation is a violation of the peace agreement and the IFOR commander will judge when and what force will be used to enforce the settlement;

- IFOR forces should be authorized to stop deliberate violence to life and person against international civilian personnel and indigent population, and to act against gross humanitarian violations where NATO forces are present or have the means and opportunity to act;

- IFOR will not be responsible for investigating past incidents of attacks, atrocities, or human rights violations;

- IFOR will not provide protection for relief convoys and civilian movements;

- IFOR will not evict civilians from newly found homes nor bring prior residents back;

- Although IFOR will recognize the right of displaced civilians to return to their homes, it will not become involved and has no role in movement of refugee population;

- In the event of a major breakdown in compliance, and because this is a NATO-led operation, the NAC will ultimately define "total breakdown" based on the situation and the advice of military commanders;

- The IFOR commander will coordinate his actions with the Senior Implementation Coordinator (SICOR) and can talk to the civilian heads of each entity concerning military matters.

2. Deputies agreed that the following unresolved issues required immediate resolution by Principals:

- Under what circumstances will the IFOR use force against the Federation, in keeping with the principle of impartiality adopted by NATO?

- Will IFOR pull out if the Serbs unilaterally withdraw "strategic consent?" Will IFOR use force to enforce Serb acceptance before pulling out as the option of last resort?

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

- What does IFOR do about reported "over the horizon" violations of the peace agreement or gross violations of human rights?

- Should there be an IFOR symbolic presence on the external borders, particularly the inter-Serb border?

- Do we want a 20 km heavy-weapons-free zone and/or a 2 or 4 km all-weapons-free zone along the zone of separation?

- What is the nature of IFOR presence in Serb territory besides free access?

- What is an acceptable end state for the U.S. when IFOR leaves?

Summary of Conclusions

Economic Reconstruction

1. Deputies reviewed the IWG paper on economic reconstruction for Bosnia and endorsed its overall approach to an international assistance package for Bosnia, noting that the paper was evolving and details such as conditionality, donor coordination and technical versus reconstruction assistance, needed further work. (Action: State, Treasury, AID) They agreed that a U.S. share ($600 million, roughly 20 percent of the projected contribution from individual donors) should be recommended to Principals for

2. Deputies agreed that OMB should prepare a paper for principals' decision with options for funding the U.S. share of both IFOR and reconstruction funding as a basis for consultations with Congress. Deputies further agreed that costs for equipping and training the Bosnian Government would not be included in the funding options but would be addressed separately. (Action: OMB) ~~(C)~~

Military Stabilization

3. Deputies reaffirmed the priority we attach to arms control and a "build-down" of the forces of the parties. They noted the difficulties of equipping and training Federation forces in the context of peace implementation, as well as the role it could play in an overall stabalization program and agreed that Principals should reexamine the U.S. role in coordinating the equipping and training of the Federation, based on the OSD paper. They further agreed to forward to Principals' for decision the recommendation that an assessment team be sent to Bosnia immediately. Deputies agreed that the Joint Staff should develop the terms of reference for the assessment team for Principals' approval. (Action: JCS) ~~(S)~~

4. Deputies further agreed to have OSD prepare for Principals a paper outlining the pros and cons of using exclusively contractors rather than a combination of military personnel and contractors to equip and train the Federation's military. (Action: OSD) ~~(S)~~

Sequencing

Deputies agreed to have the new Bosnia Implementation ExComm coordinate the preparation of a paper for Principals' decision outlining the sequencing of key events and decisions required before and after the signing of a peace agreement. (Action: State and NSC) ~~(C)~~

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

BOSNIA TODAY

Bosnia is a country torn apart by war and ethnic conflict. The war has destroyed much of the Bosnian economy. In 1990, GDP was about $10 billion (about $1,900 per capita), compared with about $2 billion (about $500) today. War brought economic activity to a standstill:

- By August 1994, industrial output was about 2 percent of 1990 levels.
- Bosnia's exports dropped from $2 billion in 1990 to $6 million in 1993; imports were reduced from $2.2 billion in 1990 to $32 million in 1994.
- Employment has fallen from a 1991 level of 800,000 to 72,000.
- Approximately 1.3 million people (mostly Muslims) are currently displaced from Bosnia, with another 1.4 million internally displaced. In addition, about 200,000 Bosnians (of a total population of ?? million) are dead or missing.
- War has damaged a large portion of the physical infrastructure, much of which were military targets; 35 percent of Bosnia's roads, 40 percent of its bridges, 50 percent of its power stations and central telecommunications facilities are destroyed.
- As a consequence of the war, at least 80 percent of the population in the Federation receives some form of food aid.
- Lack of a strong central authority, continuing hostilities and ongoing transition pose unparalleled difficulties in establishing effective fiscal and monetary authorities. The situation is complicated by the widespread circulation of the German mark as the currency of choice.

ESTIMATED NEED

Humanitarian needs will depend upon a stable peace and the flows of people. There are estimates of expected needs as high as $1 billion over the next three years. The USG contribution is expected to be approximately $200 million from State and USAID. Adequate FY 96 budget authority exists for this purpose in both agencies, and are expected to be adequate for following years.

Rehabilitation/reconstruction needs will be further refined as security conditions permit. The World Bank has established as an objective the restoration of two-thirds of pre-war per capita income of $1900 by the year 2000. To do so will require growth rates of more than 20 percent annually for the next 3-4 years. That goal will also require an estimated $6 billion in external support, including debt reduction, over the next three years. Of this, bilateral donors would need to provide $3 billion, largely on concessional terms.

Issues for Discussion

There are no issues for discussion for humanitarian assistance. The size of the U.S. commitment for the rest of the assistance package is discussed further under Congressional strategy.

MACRO-ECONOMIC VERSUS PROGRAM ASSISTANCE

The IMF/World Bank have developed a preliminary medium-term balance of payments scenario for Bosnia which includes debt reduction and arrears clearance, reconstruction and transition to a private market economy, the build-up of foreign exchange reserves and qualifying for IMF and World Bank membership so that Bosnia can begin its own self-help. Treasury estimates that this comprehensive reform and financial package will cost approximately $4.7 billion over three years, after debt reduction. Of this, the IMF/World Bank, the EBRD and commercial creditors could provide approximately $1.5 billion, leaving $3 billion to be provided by bilateral donors.

A traditional USG share (20 percent) would amount to approximately $600 million over three years. Treasury, working with World Bank data, calculates that through a mix of loans and grants, we can fund: $200 million grant money for essential inputs; an additional $400 million of inputs leveraged by a $200 million loan; $3 million budget costs for a two-thirds debt reduction; and, up to $100 million worth of additional project support, including technical assistance.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Much of USAID's program assistance for Bosnia reconstruction ($xxx million over XXX years) would be grant money for key imports and, thus, also would count as Balance of Payments support. There will be a clear need, however, for equally important programs of reform and to build and strengthen Bosnia's political institutions. Elections, an independent media, dispute resolution, privatization, institution building, capital markets development -- all are as important for Bosnia's survival and transition to a private market economy as they have been for the other Central and East European countries. For the most part, such project assistance will not count against the USG share of Balance of Payments support.

Issue for Discussion

What is the appropriate mix of macro-economic, reconstruction, and project assistance for the USG assistance package? What is the mix that will be best received on Capitol Hill?

CONGRESSIONAL STRATEGY

Assuming that there can be agreement on the elements of a USG assistance package, three major issues remain:

-- the method and strategy for gaining congressional approval; and

-- the timing for implementing such a Congressional strategy, preserving at the same time maximum leverage for the U.S. negotiator at the peace talks.

--size of U.S. contribution to the comprehensive assistance package.

There are essentially four possible approaches to funding a reconstruction assistance package for Bosnia:

-- an emergency supplemental;

-- a supplemental with offsets;

-- reprogramming; and

-- inclusion of the Bosnia package in the budget endgame negotiations.

Neither State nor USAID can support a plan for reprogramming or a supplemental with offset within the Function 150 account. OMB is of the view that an emergency supplemental stands but the slenderest chance of success, and offsets and reprogramming the best. OMB offers as an alternative, an increased USG share of humanitarian assistance with other donors picking up a proportionately larger share of the reconstruction assistance.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

All agencies agree that consultations with Congress on the size and shape of the Bosnia assistance package should begin, but any formal request should not be made until a peace settlement is initially in hand. At that time, a case could be made that Congressional approval of the Bosnia package is necessary to cinch the deal.

Issues for Decision:

What is the size and shape of the USG assistance package? When do we begin to consult with Congress? What is the budget strategy -- supplemental, offsets or reconciliation? What is the budget strategy for requesting IFOR funding and reconstruction -- a single or separate request?

CONDITIONALITY

An objective of the US-led peace process is the emergence of a viable, unified Bosnian state where the rights of individuals are respected and protected. Already, however, certain proscriptions and limitations have been imposed. For example, FY96 SEED funds for Bosnia are limited to Federation territory.

Issues for Decision:

Is it possible to apply minimal standards of conditionality: respect for the War Crimes Tribunal, right of return, a commitment to democratic and economic reform? Is it prudent and practical to deny aid to Republika Srpska, Serbia and even to Croatia? What entity monitors conditionality -- individual states? Senior Steering Group? the Senior Implementation Coordinator?

DONOR COORDINATION

To date, donor coordination efforts have produced largely rhetorical responses, especially from the EU, the OIC and the Japanese. While all parties concur that a generous reform and reconstruction plan is critical and that a donor coordination mechanism is desirable, agreement on a concrete plan still eludes us. Press speculation abounds as to the amount of contributions to be expected for reconstruction, but without a peace agreement in place, donors have been reluctant to commit to precise numbers.

The EU has stated that they will take the lead as a donor and in donor coordination on the ground in Sarajevo. Economic reform policy should be designed by the World Bank and IMF. The accepted mechanism for donor pledging coordination by the Bank is the Consultative Group. We see the World Bank taking the lead here with a co-chair role for the EU. Other coordination issues, such as who will lead the coordination on the ground, to whom that person will answer, and where a coordinating policy body will sit, will be discussed at a World Bank meeting November 10.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

The role of the World Bank, which has been suggested as a technical secretariat for the coordinating mechanism, should be further refined so that negotiations can ensue and constraints on their participation (arrears) be addressed.

Issues for Decision:

Given the Europeans' concerns about the coordination mechanism and answerability, what should the U.S. position be in the November 10 World Bank negotiations on assistance coordination?

What is the appropriate level of a European contribution to the assistance package?

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Assistance for Bosnia

Bosnia is a country torn apart by war and ethnic conflict. The country has come to play an important role in the post-Cold War era, demonstrating some of the weaknesses and danger points in the new configuration of forces in Europe, and between Europe and the United States. The latest efforts to bring peace to the region demonstrate a firm U.S. commitment to support a stable and prosperous Europe. The USG is creating an assistance package that will lend credibility to the peace settlement, stimulate economic reform, lay the basis for a multi-ethnic democracy, and give the people and government of Bosnia a stake in the peace.

THE ECONOMY

The war has destroyed much of the Bosnian economy. In 1990, GDP was about $10 billion (about $1,900 per capita), compared with about $2 billion (about $500) today. War brought economic activity to a standstill:

- By August 1994, industrial output was about 2 percent of 1990 levels.
- Bosnia's exports dropped from $2 billion in 1990 to $6 million in 1993; imports were reduced from $2.2 billion in 1990 to $32 million in 1994.
- Employment has fallen from a 1991 level of 800,000 to 72,000.
- Approximately 1.3 million people (mostly Muslims) are currently displaced from Bosnia (pre-war population estimated at 4,366,000), with another 1.4 million internally displaced. In addition, about 200,000 are dead or missing.
- War has damaged much of the physical infrastructure, much of which were military targets; 35 percent of Bosnia's roads, 40 percent of its bridges, 50 percent of its power stations and central telecommunications facilities are destroyed.
- As a consequence of the war, at least 80 percent of the population in the Federation is dependent on food aid.
- Lack of a strong central authority, continuing hostilities and ongoing transition pose unparalleled difficulties in establishing effective fiscal and monetary authorities.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

The needs, therefore, are vast. Rehabilitation and new investments will be required in all infrastructure sectors, housing and the education and health systems. Funds will be needed for macro-economic assistance, financing supplies and recurrent budgetary costs.

WHAT IS NEEDED

A Needs Assessment by the World Bank. At the urging of G-7 Finance Ministers, the World Bank and the IMF have taken the lead in the design of an assistance package and financial normalization proposal for Bosnia that the international community will use as a blueprint.

It should be noted that World Bank figures are drawn from a discussion paper with data as late as August 15, 1995. This is before the Bosniacs made their recent territorial gains, and thus all data concern only thirty percent of internationally recognized Bosnian territory. Figures below concern the Federation. World Bank figures for Serb held parts of Bosnia and the new parts of Bosniac territory will be added later.

The financial plan is a complex series of events that offers a viable Bosnian state on the basis of Bosnian reform and reconstruction, substantial external finance, and comprehensive international coordination. This plan must be comprehensive and consist of many pieces, including addressing Bosnia's arrears, providing for its reconstruction and transformation to a private market economy, and satisfying the financial requirements for membership in the IMF and World Bank. Key details are as follows:

- The blueprint aims at restoring per capita income to 2/3 of pre-war levels of $1,900 by the year 2000. To do so will require achieving growth rates of 20 percent annually for the next three to four years. The growth will be possible only if sound economic reforms are implemented, key infrastructure is rehabilitated and economic activity is normalized.

- To achieve these results, it is estimated that a total of about $6 billion of external support, including debt reduction, will be required over the next three years. Bilateral donors will need to provide $3 billion of this amount. A 20 percent U.S. share of this package is likely to be around $600 million.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

- Deep debt reduction on Bosnian debts to official creditors (Paris Club) and commercial creditors (London Club) will have the effect of bringing Bosnia's inherited debt down to a level that will permit it to take on new loans without ending up financially non-viable.

- Bosnia is not a member of the IMF and World Bank. Bosnia has inherited arrears for former Yugoslavia, approximately $400+ million to the World Bank, and $35 million to the IMF. These arrears must be cleared before the institutions will begin lending operations. The arrears piece of the puzzle falls into place as part of the comprehensive financial plan. Bosnia's total debt stock to all creditors is $2.9 billion.

- Once arrears are cleared, the Bank estimates it might provide $400 million to Bosnia in the first year. This amount could facilitate arrears clearance through a de facto refinancing. The clearance of arrears will likely entail some bilateral contributions and bridge loans.

- EBRD and commercial flows are slated to come on-stream toward the end of three years. Commercial creditors will likely not find Bosnia creditworthy until they see the economy turning around.

U.S. OBJECTIVES

The U.S. is driving the peace process now. As part of our leadership of the negotiations, we are working cooperatively with the European Union and the international financial institutions to develop an assistance package that will reinforce the peace settlement. U.S. objectives are as follows:

- To create a stable, prosperous, multi-ethnic democracy in which human rights are respected and displaced people are allowed to go where the want on Bosnian territory.

- To encourage the achievement and subsequent implementation of a peace settlement; we expect the EU to take the lead as a donor and in organizing the implementation of reconstruction; the World Bank will take the lead in designing a financial plan that will lead to Bosnia's financial normalization.

- To play a prominent role in providing humanitarian relief and a supporting role in economic reconstruction and transition to a private-market economy in the Federation and other areas of the former Yugoslavia.

- To promote the development of political and economic structures in the Federation that will stimulate economic growth and the creation of democratic governance at the Federation, cantonal and local levels.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

- To foster political and economic ties between the Federation and Republika Srpska.

- To support the construction of peaceful and productive relations among the countries of former Yugoslavia and between them and their neighbors.

ELEMENTS OF THE ASSISTANCE PACKAGE

The U.S. assistance package should:

- Provide protection and care for refugee and displaced populations.

- Support a comprehensive repatriation plan to deal with vulnerable displaced populations and the return of refugees now in Western Europe, as well as those who choose to relocate as a result of redrawing of the map.

- Phase-out of humanitarian assistance as needs decline.

- Implement a quick impact municipal rehabilitation package.refugees now in western Europe, as well as those who choose to relocate as a result of redrawing of the map.

- Contribute to the physical reconstruction of Bosnia through provision of financial support for reconstruction, consistent with our part of the comprehensive international effort.

- Help meet Bosnia's financing needs, including providing it with the substantial concessionality it will need to rebuild its economy without creating excessive debt burden for the future.

- Implement programs that promote privatization, development of capital markets, stimulation of private enterprise.

- Encourage nation-building, evolution of democratic institutions and rebuilding of a civic society.

- Begin the process of self-help through membership for Bosnia in the World Bank and IMF and access to substantial funds and commercial credit which will result.

The assistance package will help Bosnia establish a market-based economy supported by democratic institutions. The Bosnians themselves have declared their interest in making the transition from socialism. A stable, secure and economically viable Bosnia, firmly anchored in international and European institutions, will no longer require an extensive foreign military presence.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

U.S. Treasury Analysis and Proposal for Financial Normalization.

The Fund/Bank blueprint points toward the following financing structure:

- To achieve economic transformation, Bosnia will need to stabilize, liberalize and privatize its economy. Stabilization will require sound fiscal and monetary policies that promote low inflation.

- Bosnia will require a single monetary authority in the future to ensure low inflation and promote confidence in the currency.

- Liberalization will require the dismantlement of price controls and regularization of payment for utilities. Bosnia must open its trade regime to the world at large so that commerce will help restart the economy.

- Bosnia's state firms and banks must be privatized.

Treasury cites the following steps as necessary for the comprehensive financing package to work:

- Total required financing (after debt reduction) over the three year period following peace will approximate $4.7 billion, of which:

  --The IMF and World Bank could provide $0.9 billion, assuming Bosnia implements sound reforms.

  --The EBRD and commercial creditors could provide $0.6 billion.

  --Bilateral donors would need to provide $3 billion, largely on concessional terms.

  --These amounts exclude humanitarian and technical assistance.

Burden-Sharing. In mobilizing bilateral pledges toward international support packages, the U.S. often contributes on the order of 25 percent. In the case of Bosnia, a lower contribution, perhaps around 20 percent, could be envisaged:

- The U.S. will cover a large portion of IFOR costs.

- The EU has indicated its strong desire to play a prominent role in Bosnia's reconstruction.

- The donor pool for Bosnia should be large due the exceptional focus of international attention.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

The U.S. Contribution. The notional U.S. contribution over three years should be around $600 million, assuming $3 billion is required in bilateral donor financing and a 20 percent U.S. share. We will seek out those projects that have super-high rates of return which will jumpstart recovery.

- The U.S. will want to seek out critical infrastructure projects to remove bottlenecks choking the economy.

- We should furnish Bosnia with material inputs to carry out these projects.

The U.S. has indicated it could provide $250 to $500 million. Taking this as a given, and trying to make it consistent with a 20 percent U.S. share of the bilateral contributions under the Fund/Bank blueprint, a hypothetical U.S. approach might entail the following pieces:

- The package of $250 to $500 million as a U.S. contribution could be translated into $600 million of support and allow us to meet our three year target.

- Bosnia owes the USG $51 million in Paris Club debt. The budget cost of 2/3 debt reduction on the U.S. amount might be $3 million. This amount would be the U.S. cost for triggering a $1.6 billion debt reduction package.

- Grant financing of $200 million could provide Bosnia with essential imports from U.S. suppliers.

(o To provide another $400 million in inputs, the U.S. could consider using grant monies to leverage loans. If we can extend loans of $400 million against budget scoring of $200 million, we can multiply our scarce resources.)

- This mix of loans and grants will allow us to meet our international financing commitments, while offering Bosnia appropriate concessionality.

- Substantial resources will remain (up to $100 million) for project assistance. Projects assistance will help Bosnia to put in place the legal institutions for democracy and free markets, to privatize the economy, and build capital markets.

SIZE AND MIX OF THE U.S. PROGRAM ASSISTANCE PACKAGE

Assistance to Bosnia is best seen as a package which puts the various elements in place simultaneously. Beyond the above-mentioned financial package, the U.S. program strategy will consist of three parts within the comprehensive, multi-donor economic revitalization and reconstruction program:

- Complete and redirect the humanitarian program from relief through a recovery phase.

- Mount a quick impact and then longer-term economic revitalization and reconstruction program.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

- Support urgent economic transformation steps and democratic reforms.

Timing. During the peace negotiations, humanitarian assistance will continue to be delivered. Extensive planning is under way for economic revitalization. A quick impact demonstration of U.S. reconstruction support will be launched as soon as a peace document is in place. It is anticipated that IFI funds will be slow at first, so the U.S. will front load its reconstruction program in the first four to six months. The larger multi-year reconstruction effort will start as supplemental funds become available.

Humanitarian Assistance. The need for humanitarian assistance in the Federation, Croatia and Serbia will flow primarily from the movements of people. We believe the best way to organize the multi-lateral humanitarian effort will be for the UNHCR, the agency that leads multi-lateral relief efforts on the ground, to continue that lead. The EU should head a donor group that will give policy guidance for operations. Based on discussions with UNHCR and the EU, this arrangement appears acceptable.

Role of the USG. USAID's Office for Disaster Assistance (OFDA) and Food for Peace (FFP), and the Office of Emergency and Humanitarian Assistance have provided food aid and temporary shelter materials and supplied health, hygiene, basic water and sanitation, and mental health activities.

State and Bureau of PRM

Quick Reaction.

Immediately following a peace settlement, there will be pressure to expand assistance activities. In part, such demands will arise from the terms of the peace accords themselves. Elections will be called, human rights monitors will be needed, mediation and arbitration mechanisms will have to be offered and populations on the move will demand care and protection. It will be incumbent upon the international community to respond quickly.

To engage citizens in the peace settlement, small, but highly visible projects will have to begin immediatley.

We are preparing to quickly expand our present activities, particularly in the area of quick impact municipal rehabilitations. The municipal rehabilitation program will provide intensive support to selected municipal or canton areas to repair municipal infrastructure, rehabilitate housing, and stimulate small business. The goal of the program is to facilitate the return of displaced populations and to immediately demonstrate the benefits of peace to local populations. Participating municipalities will be carefully selected based on a willingness to work through federation structures, accept the return of displaced persons, and build multi-ethnic communities.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

In addition, as disputes arise over issues such as property ownership, education, municipal and cantonal structuring, or freedom of movement, U.S. assistance in alternative dispute resolution ((ADR) and mediation will help diffuse tensions and ease the pressure these disputes would otherwise create on a weak judicial system.

USAID will accelerate delivery of ongoing relief programs for the most vulnerable, especially through the winter. Programs of refugee relief, food aid, temporary shelter material, support in basic water and sanitation and setting up basic services will continue.

USAID's humanitarian assistance will be redirected in the post-settlement phase to support repatriation and resettlement.

The State Department's Bureau of Population, Refugees, and Migration (PRM), will work with UNHCR to assure a structured, phased repatriation/return regime. PRM will seek to cover between 20 and 25 percent of the funding needs of UNHCR and other international organizations operating in the former Yugoslavia. PRM will seek to meet these needs through a combination of FY96 program fund and funds from the Emergency Refugee and Migration Assistance Fund (ERMA).

The Office of Humanitarian and Refugee Affairs at DOD works with USAID and State to deliver medical supplies, pharmaceuticals, winter clothing, school supplies, blankets and other items.

Economic Revitalization and Reconstruction.

Quick Reaction. Immediately following a peace settlement, there will be pressure to expand assistance activities. We must be prepared quickly to expand our present activities, especially in the event of large scale population moves as displaced persons return to their homes. An interagency working group is assembling a "quick reaction" proposal that will get immediate and visible assistance on the ground. A list of projects is being developed that will support the peace negotiations and will take initial steps to support the Federation.

Institutions at the Federation level, particularly banking, finance, customs and other financial institutions will receive technical assistance. Planning is under way for holding elections, and for work with canton-municipal entities.

With domestic production capacity operating at a minimal level, much of the materials and supplies for reconstruction must be imported, and this while foreign exchange reserves are depleted.

USAID proposes financial support for reconstruction inputs and will finance the importation of a specified list of materials, equipment, and spare parts. Commodity related services, such as installation and training, would be included. Among the anticipated results:

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

- Timely supply of critical inputs for reconstruction.
- Establishment of market-exchange rates and real positive interest rates.
- Creation of demand for local currency, stimulus for the banking system.
- Strengthening of communications linkage between local private importers and international suppliers.

U.S. assistance will help ease the shortfall of foreign exchange needed for reconstruction projects. It will provide advisory services to the Bosnian government to assist with currency stabilization and support for federal financial organizations.

Systemic Economic and Democratic Reform

Critical projects include:

- Assistance for privatization of enterprises, including preparation of business plans for companies, tender preparation and bid evaluations.
- Capital markets development, including establishment of a Securities Commission and a stock exchange.
- Commercial law development, including civil and commercial codes, securities regulations and laws, banking laws, bankruptcy laws and tax codes.
- Bank reform for privatization, bank recapitalization, asset write-off and private mortgage financing.
- Government institution-building to help bring together divided municipal administrations.
- Support for free and independent media through training in the U.S., establishment of a media center, training in election coverage and in running a media entity as a business.
- Establishment of a network of human rights abuse monitors and longer term assistance to the judicial sector.

ISSUES WHICH DRIVE THE USG SHARE

The most critical element of the assistance package is the price tag. The budget situation this year will play a large role in determining the size of the Bosnia reconstruction package and thus its ultimate success or failure. The fact that the overall Bosnia interest has an expensive military component will also affect our ability to request reconstruction money from Congress.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

It is in our interest to bring the Bosnia conflict to a close and to begin to repair the extensive human and physical damage to the region. The negotiators at the Proximity Talks need to know their efforts are reinforced by a solid program for reconstruction. The Bosnians have stated publicly that it is important to have such a program in place for them to buy into a peace negotiation.

Our purpose is to see that the assistance package contributes to the creation of a stable and economically viable Federation with adequate protection of the rights of individuals of all ethnic groups. It must promote reform and stimulate the mobilization of internal resources. It must invest the people and authorities of Bosnia in the peace process and not create an aid-dependent state.

We intend to strongly encourage the EU to accept a donor rate which would make the EU a "majority stockholder" in the reconstruction effort. Anything less would belie their "lead role" in Bosnia reconstruction.

STRATEGY FOR BURDEN-SHARING

We support a donor coordination effort for post war construction that includes a strong decision making presence on the ground in Sarajevo for principal donors, supported by an inter-governmental body to provide policy guidance. Donor representatives in Sarajevo would be linked with whatever organization is created to monitor and direct implementation of the peace settlement.

The USG, EU Commission, World Bank/IMF will meet in Washington November to nail down reconstruction coordination roles and responsibilities.

At the November meeting, we will seek agreement on a Senior Steering Group (SSG) and Senior Implementation Coordinator. There is no agreement about the answerability of the SICOR or SSG, but there is agreement the policy authority will not be the EU Commission, G-24 or the UN.

If the SICOR is a European, there is agreement that the deputy would be the senior U.S. rep to the senior coordinating body.

USG Role. We want the EU in the coordination lead on the ground in Sarajevo; we want the Europeans as the largest donors. Nevertheless, we will have to play a very strong stimulating role. Our concept of a well coordinated but decentralized assistance effort is intended to avoid the pitfalls of over-centralization by Federation authorities in Sarajevo, and allow donors to deal with a range of public and private institutions at national and local levels. We must assure that donor efforts provide sufficient support to building political and economic institutions at the Federation level. A strong commitment to Sarajevo and the Federation will surely be essential to gain host government support for a reconstruction program.

Conditionality. The Federation concept is an essential ingredient in the Bosnian peace process. We will insist in the negotiations that bilateral assistance be conditional on observance of human rights, and that certain basic freedoms such as freedom of movement and open borders are established.

Donors Conference. As the peace settlement begins to come into view, there will be a need for a pledging conference. Once a country is a member of the World Bank, it is normal to have annual Consultative Group meetings at which Bank members can gather under the auspices of the Bank to pledge resources. There will have to be a new agreement on a CG-like mechanism.

The EU Commission and the World Bank are poised to organizing a compromise on a donor's conference. The Bank will provide its experience and know-how; the WB will provide and organize the venue.

A possible conference may also be a topic of discussion at the Bank during the November 9-10 meetings.

The timing of such a conference should be after a peace agreement has been signed, so that donors are convinced that they are contributing to a cause that has some chance of success. (Donors have been somewhat reluctant to fund the UN Coordinator's Office in Sarajevo over the past year as it seemed such a hopeless cause.)

HILL STRATEGY

The Bosnian Government believes they will need $6 billion in outside assistance to the Federation alone.

United we receive the updated WB needs assessment, possible U.S. contributions for humanitarian, reconstruction and financing assistance to Bosnia could range from $334 million in currently identified resources to approximately $xx million over a three-year period. (This figure does not include a separate estimate for possible U.S. positions of military goods and services to the Federation.)

For FY 1996, the Administration requested $21.2 billion for the International Affairs Function (Function 150) largely through three separate appropriations bills. Assuming the highest possible outcome for all three appropriations bills, the Congress is likely to appropriate only $18.1 billion.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Despite this lower total for Function 150, the Congress is likely to provide most of the Administrations request for the major humanitarian assistance accounts that would fund their portions of a Bosnia program. There should be sufficient humanitarian funding for requirements in former Yugoslavia (c. $162 million in FY 96) from anticipate annual appropriations. Thus, supplemental resources for humanitarian assistance should not be necessary.

The situation for economic assistance accounts, however, is considerably less sanguine. These accounts are bearing the brunt of Congressional reductions from the FY 1996 requested level. At the currently anticipated appropriation level, U.S. economic assistance for rehabilitation and reconstruction is only about $54 million for FY 1996 (including carryover funds), with perhaps another $72 million in the outyears. Moreover, there is no money currently allocated to support a medium-term financing strategy for Bosnia. The gap between initial notional targets for reconstruction and financing is approximately $300 million.

Options for Funding

The Administration is in the midst of negotiations with Congress over both discretionary accounts (the appropriations bills) for FY 1996 and reconciliation, which includes both mandatory accounts and revenue provisions for FY 1996 through at least 2002.

Some appropriations bills have been or will be shortly signed by the President (e.g., Agriculture). Other bills, such as Defense appropriations (which provides $7 billion more than the Administration's request), Commerce/Justice/State and Foreign Operations (because of low funding and population provisions) are currently subject to veto threats. In addition, the Administration has major differences with various budget reconciliation proposals, which may lead to prolonged negotiations over major portions of the budget through the fall ('Budget Endgame').

In this context, three options for securing additional funds for Bosnia are discussed below (1) an FY 1996 emergency supplemental; (2) an increase in assistance to Bosnia as part of the "budget endgame" negotiations" or (3) a 1996 offset supplemental and/or reprogrammings from within probably international affairs resources.

Option 1: FY 1996 Emergency Supplemental. The Administration would propose an emergency supplemental to the Congress to cover the projected gap (between targets and identified funding) for FY 96 alone (c. $xx million) or for all three years (c. $xx million). The justification to the Congress would be the urgent need to provide assistance, namely to the Federation. As an "emergency," the supplemental would not require the Administration to propose budget offsets.

Advantages:

- The Administration could draw upon positive Congressional feelings over the US-led success in negotiating a peace settlement in Bosnia.

- The Administration would avoid making painful reductions in other foreign aid programs in order to offset the deficit impact of the supplemental.

- To the degree that the Administration could "front load" Bosnia funding requirements into an FY 1996 supplemental, it could relieve outyear funding pressure on other foreign aid accounts.

Disadvantages:

- An emergency supplemental would have only a slender chance of success. This congress has refused to pass supplementals without full offsets, even for defense and in the cases of the California earthquake and Oklahoma City bombing.

- If the Administration itself did not identify offsets, the Congress might impose them from other, perhaps higher, Administration priorities.

- "Front loading" an emergency supplemental with money that would otherwise be spent in 1997 or future years undermines the case for an "emergency" designation.

- Requesting a supplemental without offsets could undercut public and Congressional perception of the Administration's willingness to meet deficit targets.

Option 2: "Budget Endgame" Negotiations. The Administration initially thought that the FY 1996 and future budgets might be resolved in a manner similar to the 1990 Budget Agreement in which appropriations, revenues and entitlements were settled in one intense negotiation. Under this scenario, it might be possible to increase the level for FY 1996 foreign aid appropriations for Bosnia.

Such a scenario, however, is now less probable in that several appropriations bills are likely to be passed and signed with as yet unscheduled negotiations between Congress and the Administration over the major elements of a budget endgame -- entitlements and revenues. Nonetheless, the budget endgame remains an option, in which the Administration would request $xx million in appropriations for Bosnia in FY 1996 as part of a comprehensive budget package.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Advantages:

- This option might avoid the need to identify offsets or tradeoffs for Bosnian assistance within the current limits of Foreign Operations appropriations bills.

- Endgame negotiations would be more acceptable to Congress than an emergency supplemental since funding for Bosnia would be within the deficit framework agreed to by Congress and the Administration.

Disadvantages:

- The budget endgame may not be known until the late fall, precluding meaningful Administration commitments to Bosnia during the Wright/Patterson negotiations.

- The relevant appropriations bills could be signed before any budget endgame negotiations on reconciliation, leaving no chance of increased funding for Bosnia.

- This option would still require offsets, since Bosnia funding would have to compete against other Administration priorities (Function 150 and otherwise) in the negotiations.

Option 3: Tradeoffs and offsets. Under this option, the Administration would propose FY 1996 spending for former Yugoslavia of up to $xx million, specify tradeoffs within related accounts (SEED, FSA and ESF) for Bosnia, and/or identify offsets within other unrelated Function 150 accounts. Based on current notional targets and identified resources, the Administration would have to shift other funds by as much as $xx million. Beyond FY 1996, funding for Bosnia would have to be accommodated within (probably declining) levels for Function 150. Under the Congressional budget resolution, Function 150 resources continue to decrease after FY 1996.

Advantages:

- Given this Congress, this option would be the most likely to increase resources to Bosnia in a timely manner.

- Proposing tradeoffs and offsets would underscore the Administration's commitment to apply fiscal discipline to itself.

- The Administration, rather than Congress, could take the initiative in suggesting accounts to be reduced.

Disadvantages:

- The Administration may not be able to agree in a timely manner on offsets in a resource constrained environment.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

- In a year of draconian budget cuts, many worthy but lower priority accounts would be reduced even further.

- The Administration would forgo the opportunity to request an emergency supplemental in the wake of a peace settlement.

Conclusion

In light of the constraints on any of the above three funding options, principals may want to consider reducing the overall notional target. This is essentially a sub-section to any of the three above, which is to lower the notional targets to more easily achievable levels. For this reason, it is crucial to prioritize potential US assistance programs, coordinate closely with other donors, and define the minimum level of international assistance necessary for a successful settlement.

Another route the Administration may want to consider is to ask other donors to provide a disproportionate share of assistance in a given area, e.g. in reconstruction or financing aid. The US might argue that it is bearing a disproportionate burden in other areas (e.g. for IFOR or military assistance). Alternatively, the US might trade off an increased share of humanitarian assistance (which Congress appears willing to fund) against a smaller share of economic assistance.

While it is appropriate to begin consultation with Congress on the shape and size of a Bosnia assistance package, it is probably premature to make a formal request at this time. The best time to make a formal request would be when a peace settlement is almost finished and the Administration can make the compelling case that the assistance package is necessary to cinch the deal. We should capitalize on the momentum of the lead up to a peace signing conference to maximize our leverage with the Hill.

There are political reasons why, however, weighting our assistance to one category such as humanitarian, will be unwise. If the USG does not play a lead role in all aspects of the assistance package, other donors will be less inclined to contribute. The assistance package will lose credibility if we are not involved in all phases.

CONDITIONALITY

An objective of the US-led peace process is the emergence of a viable, unified Bosnian state where the ethnic rights of individuals are respected and protected. Assistance ought to flow only in to those entities which respect basic human rights. For Bosnia and Croatia this means honoring the right of return of refugees and displaced persons, freedom of movement, respect for the War Crimes Tribunal and other such protections.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

The core causes of the war in Bosnia in Bosnia and Croatia plus the venality of the war itself suggest that it will be extraordinarily difficult to fully enforce respect for basic human rights, particularly rights of return of the displaced. While it is both morally defensible and prudent in Congressional negotiations and international fora to condition assistance on respect for human rights, such insistence will have the convenient effect of eliminating U.S. assistance to Repulika Srpska. It might, however, also produce the unwelcome effect of proscribing aid to Croatia and even the Bosnian Federation.

Donors will not be in agreement over conditionality and how it should be applied across the region. Tensions will exist between the preconditions for assistance, and the enormous demands for nation building assistance and the reactions of donors to this dilemma.

Summary of Conclusions

Military Annex to the Framework Agreement

1. Deputies reviewed the Bosnian-proposed changes to the military annex to the framework agreement and the U.S. Delegation's recommendations on the proposals and agreed to a revised text (circulated separately). Deputies agreed that State should review the Russian-proposed changes and submit through the ExComm those proposals that required Deputy-level review (Action: State). (S)

Eastern Slavonia

2. Deputies agreed that OSD and JCS should develop options for military implementation of the Eastern Slavonia settlement (Action: OSD/JCS). Deputies further agreed that State should develop options for U.S. participation in a UN transitional administration in Eastern Slavonia (Action: State). Finally, Deputies agreed that CIA should develop an analysis of the likely conditions that would exist during a transitional period to full reintegration of East Slavonia into Croatia (Action: CIA). (S)

Military Stabilization

3. Deputies agreed to send an equip and train assessment team to Bosnia to evaluate the Federation's military capabilities. (Action: OSD/JCS) Deputies further agreed to recommend to Principals that they address again their decision of early October for the U.S. to take the lead in coordinating the equip and train effort. (S)

4. Deputies agreed to recommend for Principals' decision allied proposals for a phased approach to the lifting of the arms embargo that would delay the provision of arms to the parties until IFOR had established control on the ground and the parties had complied with the initial military requirements of the peace agreement. (S)

International Police Task Force

5. Deputies agreed on the importance of monitoring and training indigenous police forces to help implement the non-military aspects of the settlement. They agreed that deploying actual international police officers, in addition to monitors and trainers, to establish and staff an international police task force was neither desirable nor feasible in resource terms. Memorandum For The Deputies Committee

From A/S Holbrooke and the US Delegation.

Subject: Changes to the Military Annex to the Peace Plan

The US Delegation has reviewed the attached Bosnian response to the draft military annex to the peace agreement and refers its recommendations to the Deputies Committee for resolution. A Deputies Committee review is requested by COB Monday, November 13, 1995 to enable the delegation to refer accepted changes to other Contact Group members and the Bosnians.

Our delegation review was guided by the philosophy that we reject any change which could lead to mission creep or other substantive changes to a document which had received a thorough US national policy review.

Some proposed Bosnian changes can be accepted at no cost to the key elements of the annex. "OK" in margins of the Bosnian comments indicates that this delegation recommends acceptance of the change. We recommend rejection or Washington guidance on all other changes proposed by the Bosnians, as marked.

Two other documents are also being sent separatly. One is the Russian review of the military annex; the other is a set of State, DoD and Joint Staff legal staff comments. The delegation requests that Washington (DoD and State) coordinate the Russian proposed changes directly with the Russians and advise the delegation if legal staff changes are to be included in the next draft.

3. Any violator of this provision shall be subject to military action by the IFOR, including the use of necessary force to ensure compliance.

Article IV

Redeployment of Forces

1. The Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and the Entities [~~the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and the Republica Srpska~~] shall redeploy their Forces in three phases:

2. PHASE I

(a) The Parties immediately after this annex takes effect shall begin promptly and proceed steadily to withdraw all Forces within thirty (30) days behind a Zone of Separation which shall be established on either side of the Agreed Cease-Fire Line that represents a clear and distinct demarcation between any and all opposing Forces. The precise Agreed Cease-Fire Line and Agreed Cease-Fire Zone of Separation are indicated on the maps at Appendix A of this Annex.

(b) The Agreed Cease-Fire Zone of Separation shall extend for a distance of approximately two (2) kilometers on either side of the Agreed Cease-Fire Line. No weapons other than those of the IFOR are permitted in this Agreed Cease-Fire Zone of Separation except as provided herein. No individual may retain or possess any military weapons or explosives within this four kilometer Zone without specific approval of IFOR. Violators of this provision shall be subject to military action by the IFOR, including the use of necessary force to ensure compliance. Specific provisions for the following locations are as follows:

(1) SARAJEVO (TO BE DETERMINED) (The Exclusion Zone remains in effect until ___)

(2) GORAZDE (TO BE DETERMINED) (The Exclusion Zone remains in effect until____)

[~~(3) BRCKO (TO BE DETERMINED)~~]

(c) The Parties shall within thirty (30) days after this annex takes effect: (1) remove all mines, unexploded ordnance, and barbed or razor wire from the Agreed Cease-Fire Zone of Separation or other areas from which their Forces are withdrawn; (2) mark all known mine emplacements, unexploded ordnance, explosive devices and demolitions within Bosnia and Herzegovina; and (3) remove all mines, unexploded ordnance, explosive devices and demolitions as required by the IFOR Commander. Violators of this provision shall be subject to military action by the IFOR, including the use of necessary force to ensure compliance.

(d) The IFOR is authorized to direct that all military personnel, active or reserve, who reside within the Agreed Cease-Fire Zone of Separation register with the appropriate IFOR command post referred to in Article VI which is closest to their residence.

3. PHASE II (AS REQUIRED IN SPECIFIC LOCATIONS)

This phase applies to those locations where the Inter-Entity Boundary Line does not follow the Agreed Cease-Fire Line.

(a) In those locations in which, pursuant to the General Framework Agreement, areas occupied by one Entity ~~are~~ to be transferred to another Entity, all Forces of the withdrawing Entity shall have forty-five (45) days after this annex takes effect to completely vacate and clear this area ~~or as otherwise directed by the IFOR Commander~~. This shall include the removal of all Forces, equipment, mines, obstacles, unexploded ordnance, and weapons. In those areas being transferred to a different Entity, in order to provide an orderly period of transition, however, the Entity to which an area is transferred shall not put forces in this area ~~[with its own Forces]~~ for ninety (90) days after this annex takes effect or until such later time as may be specified by the IFOR Commander. The Parties understand and agree ~~that the IFOR shall have the right to provide the military security for these transferred~~ areas from Day 30 until Day 91, or later as specified by the IFOR Commander, when these areas may be occupied by the Forces of the Entity to which they are transferred. Upon occupation by the Entity to which the area is transferred, a new Zone of Separation along the Inter-Entity Boundary Line as indicated on the map at Appendix A shall be established by the IFOR, and the Parties shall observe the same limitations on the presence of Forces and weapons in this Zone as apply to the Agreed Cease-Fire Zone of Separation. Specific provisions for the following locations are as follows:

(3)

(b) The IFOR is authorized to direct that all armed personnel, active or reserve, who reside within the Inter-Entity Zone of Separation register with the appropriate IFOR command post referred to in Article VI which is closest to their residence.

4. GENERAL. The following provisions apply to Phases I and II:

(a) In order to provide visible indication, the IFOR shall supervise the selective marking of the Agreed Cease-Fire Line and its Zone of Separation, and the Inter-Entity Boundary Line and its Zone of Separation. Final authority for placement of such markers shall rest with the IFOR. All Parties understand and agree that the Agreed Cease-Fire Line and its Zone of Separation and the Inter-Entity Boundary Line and its Zone of Separation are defined by the maps and documents agreed to as part of the General Framework Agreement and not the physical location of markers.

(b) ~~All Parties~~ Each Party understands and agrees that IFOR is authorized to employ all means appropriate and necessary, including military force, to deter, stop and punish violations of the annex. In particular, and without limiting the foregoing sentence, each Party understands and agrees that it shall be subject to military action by the IFOR ~~including the use of necessary force to ensure compliance,~~ for:

(4) failure to keep all Forces and unauthorized weapons outside the Inter-Entity Zone of Separation after this Zone is declared in effect by the IFOR, as provided in Article IV, paragraph 3(a) above; or

(5) violation of the cessation of hostilities as agreed to by the Parties in Article II.

5. PHASE III

Following the transfer of areas and the withdrawal of all Forces from the Inter-Entity Zone of Separation, the Parties pledge as confidence building measures that they shall: OK

(a) within 120 days after this annex takes effect withdraw all heavy weapons and Forces to cantonment/barracks areas or other designated locations. Heavy weapons refers to all tanks and armored vehicles, all artillery 75 mm and above, all mortars 81 mm above and anti-aircraft weapons 20 mm above. This movement of these Forces to cantonment areas is intended to enhance mutual confidence by the Parties in the success of this agreement and help the overall cause of peace in Bosnia and Herzegovina. These cantonment/barracks areas and other designated locations are shown on the map at Appendix B.

(b) within 120 days after this annex takes effect, in accordance with Article X, paragraph 2(a), demobilize Forces which cannot be accommodated in cantonment/barracks areas as provided in subparagraph (a) above. Demobilization shall consist of removing from the possession of these personnel all weapons, including individual weapons, explosive devices, communications equipment, vehicles, and all other military equipment. All personnel belonging to these Forces shall be released from service and shall not engage in any further training or other military activities.

6. Notwithstanding [~~the provisions of paragraphs 2, 3, 4 and 5 of this Article, or~~] any other provision of this annex, the Parties hereby agree that the IFOR has the right and is authorized to (a) compel from any location in Bosnia and Herzogovina the removal, withdrawal, or relocation of ~~specific~~ Forces ~~and~~ or weapons and (b) compel the cessation of any activities ~~which~~ that the IFOR deems [~~determines to constitute~~] a threat or potential threat to ~~either the IFOR~~ itself or its mission, or to another Party or that constitutes a threat to the object and purpose of the Framework Agreement and its Annexes. Forces resisting IFOR action in these regards ~~refusing to redeploy, withdraw, relocate, or to~~

~~cease threatening or potentially threatening activities [following such a demand by the IFOR]~~ shall be subject to [~~military action by the IFOR, including~~] the use of necessary force by IFOR. ~~to ensure compliance., and to compel [order] the cessation of any activities in,~~

THIS DOES BELONG IN THIS ANNEX. WILL ADD, IF APPROPRIATE, TO FRAMEWORK AGREEMENT.

7. The Parties understand that violations of this annex may result in the imposition of non-military sanctions. These non-military sanctions may include full or partial economic sanctions, and in particular the discontinuation of economic assistance, the suspension of air traffic rights, and the imposition of a trade and financial embargo. [NOTE: WE DEEM THIS A HIGHLY IMPORTANT PROVISION. WE WANT IT INCLUDED HERE, BUT IF IT IS INCLUDED IN THE FRAMEWORK AGREEMENT IT CAN BE DELETED FROM ANNEX 1.]

REJECT FOR THIS ANNEX

The Parties shall create a mechanism to investigate individuals suspected of having committed Crimes Against Humanity, Grave Breaches of the Geneva Conventions or other War Crimes. In particular, the Parties shall review the personnel files, if available, of all current or former soldiers or persons currently or formerly belonging to regular or irregular military organizations or groups to determine if these individuals may have committed such acts. The Parties shall assist and cooperate fully with such mechanism, as

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

The IFOR commander shall also exclude from participation in IFOR-related activities any individual whom the commander reasonably suspects to be responsible for war crimes. REJECT

Article IX

Prisoner Exchanges

1. Consistent with their obligations under international law, the Parties shall release and transfer without delay all combatants and civilians held in relation to the conflict (hereinafter "prisoners") [~~who request transfer~~], in conformity with [~~international humanitarian law~~] and the provisions of this Article.

(a) Immediately and in no event more than ten days after the date on which this annex enters into force, each Party shall release from prison, work brigade, detention site or other custody all non-combatants detained by its forces during the course of the conflict.

(c) The Parties shall cooperate fully with the ICRC and facilitate its work in implementing and monitoring the plan for release and transfer of prisoners.

(d) No later than sixty (60) days after this annex takes effect, the Parties shall arrange and coordinate regular and simultaneous exchanges [~~release and transfer~~] of all prisoners held by them.

(e) In order to expedite this process, no later than ~~twenty-one (21)~~ ten (10) OK days after this annex takes effect, the Parties shall draw up comprehensive lists of prisoners OK and missing persons and shall provide such lists to the ICRC, to the other Parties, and to the Joint Military Commission and the High Representative/Senior Implementation Coordinator provided for in the General Framework Agreement. These lists shall identify OK prisoners and missing persons by nationality, name, rank (if any) and any internment or military serial number, to the extent applicable. The Parties shall permit and facilitate visits to all such prisoners by ICRC representatives and their registration by the ICRC. This provision applies to all prisoners and prisons located in Serbia and Montenegro as

The Parties shall permit the ICRC to privately interview each prisoner at least forty-eight (48) hours prior to his or her release for the purpose of implementing and monitoring the plan, including determination of the onward destination of each prisoner.

(g) The Parties shall take no reprisals against any prisoner or his/her family in the event that a prisoner refuses to be transferred.

(h) Notwithstanding the above provisions, each Party shall comply with any order or request of the International Criminal Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia for the arrest, detention, surrender of or access to persons who would otherwise be released and transferred under this Article, but who are accused of violations within the jurisdiction of the Tribunal. Each Party must ~~[should]~~ detain persons reasonably suspected of such violations for a period of time sufficient to permit appropriate consultation with Tribunal authorities.

2. In those cases where places of burial, whether individual or mass, are known as a matter of record, and graves are actually found to exist, each Party shall permit graves registration personnel of the other Parties to enter, ~~[within a mutually agreed period of time]~~, for the limited purpose of proceeding to such graves, to recover and evacuate the bodies of deceased military and civilian personnel of that side, including deceased prisoners of war.

Article X

6. Under the coordination of the High Representative/Senior Implementation Coordinator (sic), the Parties request the OSCE to assist them in their negotiations under paragraphs 2, 3, 4, and 5 of this Article and in the implementation, including verification, of resulting agreements. They specifically request the Chairman-in-Office of the OSCE to designate a special representative to help organize and conduct such negotiations under the aegis of the OSCE Forum on Security Cooperation ("FSC"), which would enable interested OSCE participating States to support these negotiations and relate the resulting agreements to the OSCE's overall efforts on behalf of regional arms control and stability in and around the former Yugoslavia. The Parties undertake to cooperate fully with the OSCE to that end and to facilitate regular inspections by other parties and/or OSCE multinational teams. Further, the Parties agree to establish a mixed commission together with representatives of the OSCE for the purpose of facilitating implementation of the above measures and facilitating the resolution of any disputes that might arise.

Summary of Conclusions

IFOR Update

1. Deputies agreed that State should: approach the Government of Brunei once again about providing funds to support Pakistani forces previously attached to UNPROFOR and now slated to join IFOR; approach the Government of Pakistan and request that their forces in Bosnia-Herzegovina remain until funding can be found; and request that the UN provide temporary logistical support to the Pakistani units until donor funding can be found (Action: State). They further agreed that OSD should continue efforts to obtain funding support for Pakistan from Saudi Arabia (Action: OSD). (C)

Eastern Slavonia

2. Deputies agreed to recommend to the President that he approve an approach to the North Atlantic Council to extend NATO's in extremis commitment to help withdraw UNCRO forces to forces participating in the new operation in Eastern Slavonia (Action: NSC). They also agreed that appropriate calls should be made to Congress before any public confirmation (Action: OSD/NSC). (Note: On Friday, December 29, the President approved the recommendation). (S)

Military Stabilization: Equip and Train

3. Deputies approved the attached State paper regarding policy, goals, leadership, objectives, concept and next steps on equipping and training for Bosnian Federation forces. They reiterated that no U.S. military personnel in Bosnia-Herzegovina will be involved in the program but agreed that Defense Attaches in third countries could be involved. They agreed that we would channel U.S. assistance through the Federation, that we would encourage the Bosnians to obtain the services of a competent U.S. contractor to coordinate the equip and train effort and that the U.S. would have an "integrator" on the ground representing the U.S. Equip and Train task force. (S)

4. Deputies agreed on the need to continue to press the Bosnians to sever their military supply relationship and operational intelligence cooperation with Iran as the precondition for U.S. assistance and that Lake would spell out the details of our expectations with Foreign Minister Sacirbey on December 29 (Action: NSC/State). US Policy and Equip and Train

Military stabilization in the Balkans should be achieved through a combination of arms limitations and the provision of equipment and training to the Federation in a manner that creates a military balance conducive to peace in the region.

As significant as the arms control measures are, they will not, in themselves, be sufficient to achieve adequate military stabilization over the short term. Federation armed forces, which have been the most severely constrained by the arms embargo, will need to obtain sufficient military equipment and training to establish an effective self-defense capability, consistent with the weapons ceilings established by the peace agreement.

The US will work with other countries to ensure that Federation armed forces obtain the necessary equipment and training over the coming year. This will be essential to making the peace agreement self-sustaining and to ensuring Bosnia-Herzegovina's right to self-defense. However, it is also important to prevent a situation in which the Federation or its members feel they can resume the war. US civilian contractors are now completing an assessment of the requirements of Federation armed forces.

The conduct of such a program would be contingent on the GOBH ending all military support and assistance relationships with Iran and extremist forces and their withdrawal from Bosnia-Herzegovina.

US Policy Goals and Equip and Train

Two principal US policy goals in Bosnia relate directly to the concept of equip and train:

- Achieve a stable military balance in the region.
- Eliminate radical fundamentalist influence in Bosnia.

To achieve these goals, an internationally supported program is required to put in place a Federation military force capable of deterring ground attacks and defending Federation territory should deterrence fail. This capability must be in place to the extent possible over the coming year.

Leadership of the Equip and Train Program.

US leadership of the international equip and train effort is required to achieve the policy goals described above. Without US leadership, equipping and training will be fragmented, less effective, perhaps destabilizing, and subject to the actions of nations seeking to undermine US goals. The Bosnians may increase their reliance on supporters who are unacceptable to the US and alarming to Zagreb and Belgrade. Additionally, without US leadership, the Croats and Muslims in Bosnia are likely to continue to develop separate armies independent of the Federation.

US Leadership of the equip and train effort entails three requirements:

-- a strong diplomatic effort to identify and coordinate the international donors;
-- indirect and limited US-Bosnian military cooperation (orientation visits, access to some US equipment, an IMET program); these, consistent with the international effort;
-- a US contractor to manage the execution of the equip and train program.

US leadership along these lines will increase our ability to control the origin, type and extent of assistance provided to the Federation. By extension, this will increase our ability to reassure our NATO allies, Zagreb and Belgrade, and make the case that a limited equip and train program for the Federation is consistent with the Dayton Accords and IFOR impartiality. In addition, this kind of US leadership will increase the effectiveness of the equip and train effort in providing a sufficient defense capability for the Federation.

Objectives of the Equip and Train Program.

-Enhance military stability and prevent an arms race in the Former Yugoslavia.

-Promote unity in the Federation.

-Create an effective Federation civilian structure capable of command management of the Federation military.

-In one year, equip and train a Federation military force capable of deterring ground attacks on Federation territory by Srpska and successfully defending Federation territory from a revived Bosnian Serb Army, with no more than modest material support from Belgrade, should deterrence fail.

CLINTON ~~CONFIDENTIAL~~ LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

-Minimize the possibility of destabilizing influence from foreign forces.

-Over the long term, promote an integrated military structure in B-H which is oriented toward Europe and NATO and is a stabilizing force in the region.

-Protect IFOR's position of even-handedness among the parties in B-H by isolating the equip and train program from IFOR and its US military component.

US Equip and Train Concept.

A US Special Representative for Military Stabilization in the Balkans will direct a Task Force in the State Department to develop and implement the US program to lead the international effort to equip and train the Federation. The task force organization is attached. The US program will be governed by these principles:

-The US will lead the international effort to equip and train Federation forces. This effort will include European and Asian, as well as potential Middle Eastern donors.

-The program will provide sufficient deterrence and defense capability for the Federation.

- The threat to the Federation is defined as renewed shelling of Federation population centers and/or attack by a revived Bosnian Serb Army with no more than modest material support from Belgrade. A capability for a sustained offensive or for defense against regional powers would exceed the concept.

-Emphasis will be given to obtaining as much defensive and deterrence capability in the first twelve months as is consistent with US goals, although a long term program is required.

-The Institute for Defense Analyses assessment of Federation forces, with the approval of the Federation leadership, will form the basis of defining the equip and train requirement.

-No US troops will directly participate in equipping and training the Bosnians. However, IMET and orientations in the US and other indirect activities are authorized; these, to be consistent with the international effort.

CLINTON ~~CONFIDENTIAL~~ LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~

-Most equip and train funding will be provided from non-US sources. As appropriate, donors will also be asked to contribute equipment and required training to be applied against the requirement established by the US and the Federation. The US will lead the effort to establish donors from the international community. The US will create an international coordinating body of donors.

-All funding of the equip and train program in Bosnia will be done through the Federation structure, initially working through the Federation Presidency and extending as far as possible down through a joint military command structure.

--The effort to promote military integration in the Federation will commence at the outset of the equip and train program with the provision of non-lethal equipment. Planning and management of the full program, however, will require augmentation by US contractors since current Federation structures are inadequate.

-- A US integrator, subordinate to the Military Stabilization Task Force, will monitor the activities of the US contractors and serve as the task force representative in Sarajevo.

-US companies, under contract to the Federation, will assist the Federation in developing its equip and train requirements and plans.

-US equipment will be available for purchase.

-Equip and train will be overt. Belgrade and Zagreb will be kept informed of planning and execution, as will our NATO allies.

-The program will be consistent with Annex 1B of the Peace Agreement and arms control agreements which result from it.

Next Steps

- Interagency approval of the equip and train concept.

- Special Representative and task force members visit to B-H immediately after approval to discuss IDA assessment and US concept with Presidents Zubak, Izetbegovic and others. The visit will also be used to secure the signed letter holding up Bosnian participation in IMET. (The letter pledges the Bosnians not to pass training or equipment on to third parties.)

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

- The Federation encouraged to contact US contractors to assist in the management of equip and train.

- Visit by the Special Representative to Belgrade and Zagreb to establish transparency.

- Development of a congressional and public affairs strategy.

What About the BSA?

The condition of two or three separate military forces in Bosnia is incompatible with the long-term goal of a peaceful, unitary state in Bosnia. Accordingly, the Special Representative also will begin to explore ways in which, after indicted war criminals are removed and after conditions are met, the BSA and Federation armed forces can begin a peaceful evolution that will prevent a reoccurrence of hostilities.

PRINCIPALS COMMITTEE MEETING ON BOSNIA, FEBRUARY 5 1993

Tony Lake began by introducing the issue of the "end game": i.e., if we started down the road envisioned in the draft Presidential Decision Document, were we comfortable knowing that at the end of the road we would be under great pressure to help implement a settlement including with forces on the ground.

Madeleine Albright: Before we do that, I want to raise a more basic question. I am troubled by the conclusion we have reached. We are treating this area as of peripheral interest. History suggests it is more central. This policy (comment: the one in the draft PDD) legitimizes ethnic cleansing. It signals to the Central and east Europeans and to Russia that we will do nothing about it. The pieces in the draft PDD are "pretty pallid". I understand that deciding to use American forces in Bosnia would be crossing the Rubicon. But we should think about whether sweeping the problem under the rug creates more problems. The draft PDD is contrary to what Governor Clinton said and not commensurate with the importance of the issue.

Jim Woolsey: I agree with Madeleine.

Lake: (to Madeleine): You mean we should use force to enforce a settlement, not impose one?

Albright: If we say we would never impose a settlement we are blessing ethnic cleansing.

Secretary Aspin: A better way to explain the draft PDD is to say that we have a three pronged strategy. (1) more on the humanitarian front; we may come up with something more muscular. (2) pressure the parties so they will agree under Vance/Owen auspices. (3) try, under Vance/Owen, to come up with a settlement that does not require massive force to enforce.

Secretary Christopher: We should be more aggressive in describing our negative position about the current Vance/Owen plan and the only way we would get people to agree is to be prepared to enforce a settlement. But we should not throw out Vance/Owen at this point and do it ourselves. The whole EC and important figures on the Hill as well as the Russians support Vance/Owen. We cannot create a whole different structure. If an agreement can be reached, we should commit the U.S. to a greater degree of enforcement.

General Powell: I agree the draft PDD is too pallid. It reads more like a press statement than a decision document. But what would Madeleine suggest we do?

Albright: NATO action.

Several speakers: I thought we had agreed that we would help enforce a settlement.

Miss Walker: OSD and JCS Working Group members believed their principals had not agreed to that. That we would only help monitor, not enforce, a settlement.

Powell and Aspin both said that had not been their position.

General Powell: I thought we agreed that we would be willing to use force to enforce a settlement, but leave our willingness to do so "just behind the screen".

Mr. Berger: What is the end toward which Madeleine would apply force? To get an agreement or enforce it?

General Powell: The military will do anything that is decided, but we need to know what "it" is that we are being asked to do.

(my notes don't make clear who asked: ground or air forces?

Secretary Christopher: we should start with air power but be willing to use ground forces if necessary.

Mr. Woolsey: We keep talking about enforcing the whole agreement, fixing the whole situation. But we also talk about using only air power. (b)(1) There is no carrot in the present draft PDD for Bosnia. If we at least used air power to lift the siege of Sarajevo, maybe in time doing more, we could have not only a "no fly zone" but also a "no drive zone". (b)(1) So we could tell the UN that part of the package is that Bosnia can go along with something close to Vance/Owen but we potentially could bring to the party of NATO enforcement a ban on tanks, artillery, and APCs about 20-20 kilometers around Sarajevo.

General Powell" OK, but it is a commitment of bombers to go bomb. (Note: I did not take "OK" to mean agreement that we should do it.)

Secretary Christopher: Madeleine and I did not coordinate our positions before the meeting. But the draft PDD put me in the wrong mood.

Secretary Aspin: In presenting our decision we should start with what we are trying to achieve, call on all parties to end violence, reach a settlement, open the camps, and then say that to accomplish that we have a three prong strategy.

Mr. Lake The problem all along has been promising more than we can deliver. Les' press approach is OK, but only if we can say that at the end of the game we would help enforce something that the parties agree to.

Mr. Berger: What does the use of force mean? Air power, or air and ground?

General Powell: Both. We can use air power but ultimately must go in and separate the parties.

Mr. Lake: And the West Europeans won't do it alone.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Mr. Furerth: Also, if in going in we can demand implementation of some of the London Accords the Serbs agreed to, especially lifting the siege of Sarajevo. That raises the question of what we would do if the Serbs don't comply.

Mr. Lake: Let me clarify what we seem to be saying. Do we want to add to the President's package that we should say now that if all the parties voluntarily come to an agreement the US will say at the start that we are prepared to use force, including ground forces if necessary, as part of a NATO effort to help implement an agreement. An agreement that the parties had signed would include enforcement provisions.

Mr Berger: For now we should say only "including the use of force." (Secretary Aspin, others indicate agreement with Berger)

Mr. Lake: If asked whether that means ground forces, say we don't rule it out.

Secretary Aspin: Addressing it later means soon. We will need ground forces to do what the agreement calls for, such as lifting the siege of Sarajevo.

Mr. Woolsey: It would be something useful if we could stop people from killing each other with heavy weapons. Even if small arms continue to be used, that is a game the Bosnians can play. We can take away from the Serbs the heavy stuff and frighten with some of the other.

Secretary Christopher: We should describe our policy as entering the negotiations in a more aggressive way.

Mr. Lake: Yes. The draft press statement was written back because we thought there was no agreement that we would be willing to use force, including ground forces if necessary, to enforce an agreement.

Mr. Lake: Let's talk about options for contributing to the humanitarian effort

General Powell: We have several ideas we're studying. One is to take responsibility for the area southeast of Sarajevo that is not now being served. We would need an UNPRO force similar to what the UK and France have. We would open a corridor from Split or Belgrade. The latter is less promising because we would need Serbian permission. This would show that the US was making a contribution equal to, even greater than, what others are doing. Casualties would not be serious if we do essentially what the British and French are doing. The reason they don't just blast their way through is that sometimes it is better to negotiate than to blast. We would be somewhat more aggressive than the British and French, but not to the point where we have to protect the whole route. Other things we are looking at are do-able but trivial and we would be seen as not entirely serious. Air drops, for instance, are gimmicky and would look like a gimmick. They are not a serious way of delivering supplies. We would not look good just dropping medicines out of a C-130 and not knowing what happens to them. They could turn up on the black market.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Secretary Christopher: What about a one-time surge?

Mr. Lake: Are you also doing an option of lifting the siege of Sarajevo?

General Powell: The French have tossed that out recently. You can take out some artillery. That will make a difference even if not guarantee ending the siege. When the F-16s go home at night the shelling can begin again. Maybe we would luck out and get the same reaction we did by declaring the no fly zone and getting pretty good compliance without enforcement. But to really end the siege would take a full infantry division with air support.

Mr. Berger: What would be the psychological impact on the Serbs of intermittent bombing, of planes taking out batteries on an intermittent basis?

General Powell: I think it would have a deterrent impact. They would have to decide wither to take on the U.S. If they decided to continue the shelling, knowing that we from time to time would get a target would reduce the shelling but not end it.

Mr. Berger: The American people would see a big difference between using force when the parties have asked us to enforce an agreement, and pre-emotive use of force.

General Powell: Also, the relief effort would stop if we used force before a settlement.

Mr. Woolsey: The way the siege was supposed to be ended before was an agreement to put the heavy weapons in cantonments, but within range of Sarajevo. We should require that they move out of range.

Mr. Fuerth: We should insist that the guns be silenced or we will try to silence them, then that they be moved beyond range as part of a settlement.

Mr. Woolsey: Keep in mind the need for NATO agreement if we are to use our planes.

General Powell: If we decided to join the humanitarian effort on the ground, there would be great expectations that the US would force its way through. Field Marshall Dan Rather would criticize us if we did not.

Mr.Lake: What should be our diplomatic strategy?

Secretary Christopher: We should just spread out and do everything. In capitals, by telephone, work on the Bosnians, get the Germans to work on the Croatians and the Russians on the Serbs. Our message to all should be that we are prepared, under a UN and NATO umbrella, to participate in enforcing an agreement, including through the use of force if necessary.

Secretary Aspin: Are the Serbs and Bosnian Serbs the same? How can we bring pressure on all of them?

Secretary Christopher: The Serbs will say "it's not us" but Serbia supplies and controls the Bosnian Serbs. And Russia has a big influence on Serbia and claims a strong desire to solve the problem peacefully. It would serve Yeltsin's purposes to be effective in bringing about a settlement. The US and Turkey can influence Bosnia. We can change the atmosphere a lot if the US stops sitting on the sidelines.

Mr. Berger: Should we reiterate the warning on Kosovo?

Mr. Lake: How would we tell who was a fault?

Mr. Fuerth: We could elaborate our Christmas demarche, saying we are less interested in who started a riot than in insisting that heavy artillery not be used to put down civil disturbances. We would establish a principle of proportionate response.

Ambassador Albright: What about war crimes?

Secretary Christopher: That will be part of our diplomatic strategy. Part of Madeleine's job is to move it at the UN.

Mr. Berger: Is there a tension or inconsistency between pressing on war crimes and trying to negotiate?

Mr. Lake: We could focus on the grass roots offenders first rather than their leaders who give the commands.

(Speaker unclear in my notes): The US also will take more refugees

Mr. Lake: Jenonne Walker will work with State on a diplomatic, public, and Hill package for the Deputies to review over the weekend. The press package should begin with a roll of the drums: this is what we want and how we are going to achieve it.

Secretary Christopher: We can't do this with backgrounders. We have promised a statement--we've promised a Presidential statement. We should not forego the use of TV if we want to reach the public.

Secretary Aspin, Mr Berger: (Both recommended a Christopher speech, with lots of backgrounding by various officials all speaking from the same prepared text.

Mr. Lake: The sequence should be quick movement from informing allies in capitals, informing Vance and Owen and the Hill, just before the speech on Tuesday or Wednesday.

Secretary Christopher: The US will take the leadership on the diplomatic front to work on Russia to press the Serbs, on Turkey to press the Muslims,a nd on Germany to press the Croats.

Vice President Gore had joined the meeting a few minutes earlier and Leon Fuerth had been giving him a whispered summary of the group's conclusion, including willingness to help enforce an agreement.

The Vice President: I disagree. The world has let a terrible thing happen in Bosnia, but I always have been very reluctant to use American ground forces and I am sure Bill Clinton will be unless we have absolutely valid achievable objectives. There is a tension between the word "agree" and "enforce". In that creative tension we might find the parameters of our role. If there truly is an agreement, the requirements of enforcement are minimal. The current Vance/Owen plan would need to be not only enforced but imposed. Then we would have the worst of both worlds. Vance/Owen has a terrible map, and would require lots of American blood and treasure. We do not need to bring to the table a willingness to commit forces. We bring the willingness of the world's leading power to help get a true agreement. We have a great opportunity to position ourselves as the principal spokesman and advocate of a Muslim dominated coalition. In a creative way, we would identify ourselves with the core of the Muslim world. Rabin has spoken out against what is happening in Bosnia. The pressure will build because they are all looking for a way out and looking for an excuse.

Mr. Lake: Yes, to the degree a settlement is imposed, to that degree the requirement to enforce it is greater. But even when they agree, the Croatian experience shows that there still is lots of work to do.

Vice President Gore: We could test their willingness really to agree, for instance by lifting the siege of Sarajevo.

Mr. Lake: At a minimum it will need something on the ground. The more we are prepared to say we will be prepared to help with that, the more we will be taken seriously.

Vice President Gore: There is far more legitimacy to the Bosnian objections to the Vance/Owen map than Vance/Owen agree. Vance/Owen claim that the Bosnians only hold out because they hope we would come in.

Mr. Woolsey: One way to square the circle would be something that was not against Serbia, but against heavy weapons in this conflict. In principle it would be neutral.

Secretary Christopher: We should make an all out effort to persuade and convince the parties rather than impose a settlement. On the other hand, we are not talking about an agreement among three Church groups in California. This is the Balkans. It is not realistic to think that we can do without enforcement, even of a good agreement. To give an air of reality to our position, we have to say that the US will assist in carrying out the enforcement, in conjunction with the UN and NATO.

Vice President Gore: But the American people will not want to send our boys there.

General Powell: The risk of casualties would be relatively low if there is an agreement even by Balkan standards. None of the parties would stand up to a Western force that included the U.S. There would be some snipers or ambushes, but not major resistance.

At this point the President joined the meeting, and Colin Powell described the issue and repeated the last point to him.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

General Powell : The nature of a Bosnian agreement will require ground forces. We can punish from the air but not enforce from the air. If there is a reasonably good agreement, even by Balkan standards, the casualties would be acceptable. None of the parties would take on a US/NATO force. There would be snipers, road blocks, ambushes, and the like but it would not be a big deal. It will be expensive. We might luck out and be able to flood the country with troops for a time and then get out.

The President to General Powell: What's your advice?

General Powell: We can perform this mission. But it would be expensive and could be open ended with no promise of getting out. But if we start down the road of diplomatic engagement, we must be willing to help enforce a settlement.

Secretary Christopher: I agree. Vance/Owen as it stands would take a great number of troops to enforce. The alternative is a diplomatic strategy but unless we commit troops it won't get you where you want to go. So we are recommending a middle position, in which we would keep vague just what we will do but commit to some use of American forces.

Secretary Aspin: I agree.

The President: (to General Powell) Can we get out of Somalia first?

General Powell: We could get out of Somalia now if the UN would agree to take it over.

Secretary Christopher: We won't have an agreement in the near term.

The President: About six months?

Secretary Christopher: That's about right

Mr. Woolsey: We should examine whether we could do something useful without troops on the ground. We might limit what we were willing to enforce, agree not to enforce the whole agreement but to prevent the use of heavy weapons. This would mean a no drive zone as well as a no fly zone. It would not be perfect but it would be useful and could be done from the air.

Mr. Berger: There is another possible approach. I don't necessarily recommend it but it should be considered. We could say this is a European problem and they should take responsibility for enforcing a settlement.

The President (interrupting): We can't do that without giving up our whole position in the world.

Mr. Lake: We will prepare a strategy for implementing this policy.

The President and Vice President left the meeting. After a few minutes the meeting resumed to confirm that State, assisted by the Working Group, would prepare the outline of a speech as well

MEMORANDUM FOR THE SECRETARY OF STATE
THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE
DIRECTOR, CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE AGENCY
CHAIRMAN, JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF
RREPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES TO THE UNITED NATIONS
ASSISTANT TO THE VICE PRESIDENT FOR NATIONAL SECURITY AFFAIRS

SUBJECT: Decisions of March 3 Principals Committee Meeting on Bosnia

1. The U.S. will support the draft statement prepared by the Security Council P-4, to be made by the Council President following the March 4 meeting on the fighting in eastern Bosnia. ~~(S)~~

2. State will prepare instructions for consultations with European P-4 members including Russia about what we might do together if necessary to back up the words of the statement. Questions and ideas to be considered include: ~~(S)~~

   -- clarification of what is meant by a ceasefire in Council President's statement; ~~(S)~~

   -- possible changes in UNPROFOR's mandate or Rules of Engagement; ~~(S)~~

   -- enforcement of the No-Fly Zone over Bosnia; ~~(S)~~

   -- tightening enforcement of existing sanctions, e.g. including the possibility of a WEU or NATO/WEU operation to prevent violations via the Danube; and ~~(S)~~

   -- proposing new sanctions, especially to seize Serbian assets and impound vessels involved in sanctions violations. ~~(S)~~

3. State also will prepare messages to all parties in the Bosnian conflict reinforcing the Security Council President's statement. ~~(S)~~

4. Publicly and in other diplomatic exchanges, we will say that the situation in Bosnia and the Security Council President's statement mark a serious moment, and that we continue to consult on how the statement should be followed up. ~~(S)~~

5. The air drops will continue as planned, including continuing to assess how long this phase should continue. In public and in diplomatic exchanges we will say that they are being effective and that we plan to continue the operation, without specifying when drops will be made or to what sites. ~~(S)~~

6. Since land convoys presently are able to reach Tuzla, we will not now actively explore the possibility of using the airport there to fly in relief supplies. We will reconsider that possibility if the situation changes. ~~(S)~~

7. The Principals agreed to revisit the question of what more the U.S. might do if the situation deteriorates in the next few days. ~~(S)~~

MEMORANDUM FOR THE SECRETARY OF STATE
THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE
DIRECTOR OF CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE
THE CHAIRMAN, JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF
REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES TO THE UNITED NATIONS
ASSISTANT TO THE VICE PRESIDENT FOR NATIONAL SECURITY AFFAIRS

SUBJECT: Decisions of Principals Committee Meeting on Bosnia, March 13, 1993 ~~(S)~~

Committee members agreed on the need to develop a concept of phased implementation/enforcement of a Bosnian settlement that:

-- avoids a self-defeating delay during which an agreement could fall apart precisely because of failure to enforce it;

-- while also building in fail safe provisions to prevent the involvement of U.S. ground forces in a situation in which a settlement was being ignored and fighting continued virtually unabated. ~~(S)~~

During an initial period after signature of an agreement by all three parties and before this condition could be judged to have been met, air power might be used against any party engaged in a major violation. ~~(S)~~

Elements of a possible U.S. ground contribution could be getting into place, e.g. in Split, during this interim period. ~~(S)~~

The Committee will meet again to refine this concept. It will address questions such as whether we would threaten punitive action against targets in Serbia, or tactical action, e.g. against Bosnian Serb artillery shelling Sarajevo; how to frame the message we would send at time of signature; and when and how to inject this concept into multilateral planning. ~~(S)~~

MEMORANDUM FOR THE SECRETARY OF STATE
THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE
THE DIRECTOR OF CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE
THE CHAIRMAN, JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF
USUN AMBASSADOR
ASSISTANT TO THE VICE PRESIDENT FOR NATIONAL SECURITY AFFAIRS

SUBJECT: Decisions of Principals Committee Meeting on Bosnia, March 25, 1993 ~~(S)~~

1. Principals agreed on a statement to be issued by the State Department about Bosnian President Izetbegovic's signing of the Vance/Owen plan. ~~(S)~~

2. Principals agreed on the points to describe American willingness to help implement and enforce an agreement signed by all the Bosnian parties. ~~(S)~~

3. CIA Director Woolsey will prepare an assessment of how we would determine who was responsible for serious non-compliance with an agreement. ~~(S)~~

4. Multilateral movement to deploy forces would begin after signature of an agreement and passage of the necessary UN resolution. OSD and JCS will prepare a timeline, integrating those envisioned in the Vance/Owen "Military Accords" with SHAPE's contingency planning for deploying a force. The Principals will discuss this integrated timeline at an early meeting--probably Saturday March 27. ~~(S)~~

5. We will phase implementation of commitments made to Bosnian President Izetbegovic in the event of his signing in the following order: (1) tightening sanctions and closing loopholes in them (this will include proposing new Security Council resolutions, but will be described as "tightening" and "closing loopholes" in hopes of making them more palatable in Russia; (2) passage of a resolution authorizing enforcement of the No Fly Zone, on the timetable agreed between Russian Foreign Minister Kozyrev and Secretary Christopher; and (3) trying to ease the arms embargo. ~~(S)~~

Vance/Owen Plan: How To Bring The Bosnian Serbs On Board

1. We welcome acceptance of the Vance/Owen plan by the Bosnian government [and earlier by the Bosnian Croats] as a major step toward a settlement of the tragic conflict besetting Bosnia. President Izetbegovic's decision to sign, despite his government's well known reservations about the map, is an act of statesmanship. He has demonstrated flexibility and done all that we in the international community have asked of him. Despite the plan's imperfections, the U.S. believes we should all support the decision by the Bosnian government to reach agreement. We consider it imperative that the Bosnian Serbs now also reach agreement.

2. Regrettably, the Bosnian Serbs are continuing their aggression against the Bosnian state rather than ending the conflict on a just basis. This implies that ethnic cleansing and other atrocities will continue. If we do not act, the Bosnian government will find more and more of its territory forcefully incorporated into Bosnian Serb controlled areas. the Bosnian Serbs will continue to alter the map which Vance and Owen have proposed and which the Bosnian government, and the Bosnian Croats, have agreed to.

3. In essence, a sovereign government and member of the UN which has reached agreement on a plan which the EC, the Secretary General and others have accepted continues to be subjected to a cruel assault unrivaled in recent European history. This is a situation which, if allowed to continue, will send a message which will inexorably lead to the scourge of ethnic cleansing elsewhere. It is a message which we cannot be a party to and one which our publics will not understand. We are, not least of all, concerned about the signal our inaction will send to the Muslim world and the impetus it could give to Islamic fundamentalism.

4. Moreover, if the Serbs succeed in dismembering Bosnia, it could lead in short order to a wider Balkan war. The Serbs might begin ethnic cleansing in Kosovo, which could easily lead to a spillover into Albania, Macedonia and Bulgaria. This would have dangerous and unpredictable consequences for all of us, not least of all the possible involvement of our NATO allies, Greece and Turkey.

5. We, therefore, attach the highest priority to a joint effort by the leadership of the international community to convince the Bosnian Serbs and their supporters in Belgrade that they must cease making war on Bosnia and reach agreement. To this end, we must all exert maximum diplomatic, economic and other pressure on Serbia to induce it to pressure the Bosnian Serbs to accept the plan.

6. We propose the following series of phased measures, some of which we previewed to you earlier designed to bring about a Bosnian Serb signature.

a. We have already issued a strong statement of support for the Bosnian decision, including a message pressing the Serbs to negotiate and reach an agreement soon. We strongly urge you to issue similar statements.

b. In our statement, we also reiterated Secretary Christopher's Feb 10 statement on U.S. willingness to participate in a multilateral implementation and enforcement of a Tripartite Agreement. Our statement also called on the international community to offer economic aid and reconstruction assistance to Bosnia once a settlement is reached. We urge you to make a statement along these lines as well.

c. We should immediately adopt a UNSC resolution to enforce a no-fly zone over Bosnia.

d. We will now seek on an urgent basis a UNSC statement/resolution whose major elements would include: a firm statement of support for Izetbegovic's decision to sign; a demand that the Bosnian Serbs also reach agreement; and a call upon the international community to offer economic and reconstruction assistance to Bosnia. We seek your support for this resolution which Ambassador Albright will discuss with your representative at the UN.

7. If the Bosnian Serbs do not react very promptly to the foregoing steps, we believe it will be necessary to take the following additional actions;

e. An intensive diplomatic campaign aimed at further isolating and pressuring Milosevic and the Bosnian Serbs.

f. A major effort to tighten and toughen the sanctions on Serbia to new levels.

g. If the Bosnian Serbs still did not soon negotiate and reach agreement, and participate in a reduction of hostilities, we believe the international community would then have no choice but to consider a series of stronger, more forceful measures.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Some of the measures to be examined would include the following:

[TO BE DISCUSSED ORALLY]

8. We put forward these ideas as the start of a consultative process designed to end a tragic conflict. We assume you may have other ideas and we would welcome them along with your early thinking on the menu we are advancing for your consideration. We fully recognize that we are proposing consideration of a serious course of action. Some of these measures have downsides and have been considered and put aside in earlier deliberations. We will want to consult closely with you, with the Russians -- who will have some concerns -- and with Vance/Owen before proceeding. An important priority will be to assure the safety of UNPROFOR and humanitarian aid personnel on the ground.

9. But we cannot permit our aid effort to become a hostage which prevents a firm response to continuing violence and ethnic cleansing. Nor can we continue to avoid taking the tough decisions necessary to prevent a wider Balkan conflict which is a fundamental challenge to our security interests along with a continuation of the inhumanity being visited on the Bosnian people. A strong multilateral response which gets the Serbs to reach agreement. Our goal remains the achievement of an agreement accepted by all the parties, which would obviate the need for the military actions outlined above.

More Forceful Measures

-- Reinforcing and expanding through more assertive means the UNPROFOR and UNHCR humanitarian relief efforts, especially into areas where Bosnian Muslims are presently under siege and unreachable. We would be prepared to continue and even increase airdrops.

-- Fully lifting the arms embargo against Bosnia so that the legitimate government can better defend itself against Bosnian Serb heavy weapons;

-- Alternatively, a partial lifting of the arms embargo to permit the Bosnians to acquire light weapons. We might then equalize the military equation by launching multilateral air strikes against Bosnian Serb heavy artillery sites. (We would, in essence, strike at those weapons which the Bosnian Serbs had agreed to withdraw as part of the London agreements but which continue to be the spearhead of their attacks).

-- Warn the Bosnian Serbs and Belgrade that if they persist in their intransigence and their attacks, including any retaliation against UNPROFOR and humanitarian aid personnel, we would be prepared to carry out multilateral air strikes against Serb-military targets in Bosnia or in Serbia itself;

ISSUE PAPER

LIFTING THE SIEGE OF SARAJEVO

Background

This plan for lifting the siege of Sarajevo would be but one element -- albeit a major one -- of a larger plan of military arrangements for implementing an overall peace plan agreed upon by the parties. It is recognized that there are inherent limitations in drafting a plan without knowing more about the overall context.

Despite the agreements made at the London Conference last August, Bosnian Serb forces under the direction of Radovan Karadzic continue to pound the city of Sarajevo from 15 "major" artillery sites in the hills around Sarajevo. Additionally, with the exception of the Sarajevo airport, which is held by UNPROFOR, we believe there are 6000-8000 Bosnian Serb Army regular troops and 4000-5000 Serb irrregulars in the area of Sarajevo. Opposing them are 15,000-20,000 Bosnian government forces. The map at Tab A shows the reported locations of Bosnian Serb artillery in the immediate area of Sarajevo. In recent days, Bosnian Serb units have pressed forward into the suburbs of Sarajevo and into Stup, threatening to cut off the city from the airport.

There is no reliably open land route from Sarajevo to Muslim-controlled territory, all roads out being held by Serbian forces or subject to fire from them. Sarajevo depends for its food on UNHCR supplies, mostly delivered by airlifts (in which US planes participate). UNHCR estimates that, despite periodic interruptions of the airlift and of distributions from the airport warehouses, it has provided minimum subsistence rations to the city, at virtually the full level of requirements. However, food beyond survival rations, and other basic services -- water, electricity, medical supplies, fuel, building materials -- are not being provided with any regularity. Though the electrical power substaions that serve the city remain largely intact, the main power switching center in downtown Sarajevo has been destroyed, and the gas pipeline and three major (400kv) power lines servicing the city pass through Serb-controlled areas. It must be noted that the city's water and sewerage systems depend on electricty.

Sarajevo continues to function as the official headquarters of the GOBH, which the USG recognizes, although we do not, for security reasons, maintain an embassy in the city. (No country maintains an embassy there, although France does have a resident ambassador on the ground.) Significant numbers of foreigners, including UN officials (some of whom are American military attached to the UNPROFOR headquarters), journalists, and relief workers, are in the city.

Two proposals have been made for breaking this siege: the Western European Union's "Safe Haven Sarajevo" document and the Vance/Owen plan's Draft Military Accord. In addition, NATO has proposed a concept analysis of "relief areas" and "safe zones" (NATO 742). All contain many common elements, similar schedules for being put into effect -- though the Vance/Owen plan is more detailed and offers more specifics on necessities for implementation.

The plan developed below attempts to draw upon the strengths of the two existing proposals, bearing in mind the political and military realities. Since we do not have a clear sense of what different Russians have meant when they talk of a joint initiative to lift the siege, we have not endeavored to factor possible Russian views into this plan. Indeed, since their ideas might be problematic at best, perhaps it would be better to present them with our concept.

Design of the plan was based upon several assumptions. First, it assumes agreement and full compliance by all parties with all steps of the implementation process, which is problematical at best. Second, no estimates for the number of troops required to enforce the plan after compliance by the parties have been made independently. Rather, the estimates used in the original Vance/Owen and WEU formulations are repeated. Additionally, there will be a continuing requirement for humanitarian aid. The plan assumes that such will be provided by other agencies and makes no provision for escort, distribution, etc.

A major consideration is that the plan, like the Vance/Owen and WEU models, calls for the demilitarization of the city proper. In effect the legitimate government of Bosnia-Herzegovina is denied the ability to maintain military forces in its own capital.

There are, in principle, at least two other conceptual approaches to "lifting the siege":

1) Driving the Serb forces investing the city back a sufficient distance -- some 30 km for them to be out of artillery range of the city and vital infrastructure facilities -- that they could no longer impose a direct threat to the population in the city or its links with the airport, while permitting GOBH functions to continue to operate from Sarajevo.

Such an approach would seek to replicate the effects of decisive local military success by the Bosnian forces. There is no reason to believe the Serbians would voluntarily agree to pull back unilaterally, other than as a part of a general settlement (if then). Use of foreign forces to compel such an end to the vulnerability of Sarajevo to military attack would require very substantial ground and air forces and would amount to large scale, direct combat intervention on the Bosnian side. Accordingly, this approach has not been examined in detail.

2) Securing an agreement not to use heavy weapons against Sarajevo, or to a withdrawal of heavy weapons by both sides. (For these purposes, "heavy weapons" mean direct fire weapons over 12.7mm, mortars and artillery of 82mm and above, tanks, and ground-to-ground missiles.)

This would entail the Bosnian government forces' removing their heavy weapons from the city altogether and the Serbians' pulling their heavy weapons back some 30 km from the city. (Alternatively, heavy weapons would be assembled in set locations and placed under UN control.) Thereafter, both sides would remain free to continue to fight over the city and access to it, but only with lightly armed units. The focus in the plan is therefore on heavy weapons rather than on driving the Serbs back. The effect would be to reduce the dangers to the civilian population-- and, in practice, to shift the military balance toward the Muslims, who have more troops but many fewer heavy weapons.

Classified by OASD

Bosnian President Izetbegovic has said he will insist on a halt to the shelling of Sarajevo as a condition to participating further in the Vance/Owen talks. Presumably he would be prepared to agree to have Bosnian units stop their shelling of Serb positions in exchange. Whether the Serbian forces would regard keeping the Bosnians in the talks as a sufficient incentive to agree to cease shelling, much less place their heavy weapons under UN control, is uncertain.

Some element of outside enforcement is likely to be necessary for a limit on heavy weapon use to be meaningful. After the 1991 Vance accords for Croatia, Krajina Serb heavy weapons were assembled under UNPROFOR guard, but when Croatian forces broke the truce to attack Krajina Serb positions in the "pink zone," the Krajina Serb forces pushed the UN guards aside and retook control of the assembled weapons. Without an international commitment to monitor compliance with a ban on heavy weapons deployment or use and to take action against violators, it is unlikely that a ban would hold for long.

However, whether described as a prohibition on use of heavy weapons or an agreement to withdraw them from the area, this approach would differ from the first in that it might be enforceable with less foreign ground involvement. The USG, and possibly other outside governments as well, by use of highly sophisticated surveillance equipment and airborne weapons capabilities, might be able to locate and attack weapons deployed or used in violation of such an agreement, without having to use ground forces, and with a more focused and limited military commitment than would be entailed by attempting to drive off Serbian forces generally from around Sarajevo. While capabilities to detect violations and attack heavy weapons used or deployed in violation of a ban would be much less than 100%, it would probably be possible to impose a significant cost on violations. However, the weapons involved are relatively easy to conceal and are highly mobile, and the US would definitely not be able to detect and attack all violating weapons. Further analysis of US surveillance and attack capabilities are at the Codeword level.

In the event the US or other outside countries used air power to enforce a heavy weapons ban around Sarajevo, they would have crossed the line to direct military action in the conflict and, because of the imbalance in heavy weapons capability, to de facto intervention on the Bosnian government side. Even if, as seems likely, that action could be taken with relatively good effect and without requiring ground forces, US planes would be exposed to Serbian air defenses (and to the risk of a Bosnian Muslim provocation). Moreover, the Serbian forces would have the option of responding to the US action in other areas, e.g. by ceasing to permit UN relief operations or attacking UNPROFOR units. In this respect, enforcing a heavy weapons ban presents considerations similar to those involved in enforcing the no-fly zone.

The balance of this paper details a proposal for an agreed demilitarization of Sarajevo.

Basic Elements of Plan

Classified by OASD
Declassify on OADR
CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Stopping the fighting in and around Sarajevo on an agreed, internationally monitored basis will require the following basic elements:

- An agreement by the warring parties to undertake this plan and to accept international monitoring of its implementation.

- In conjunction with this agreement will be a declaration of forces and weapons, followed by a cease-fire within three days of agreement. A demarcation line -- whose position will be determined in the agreement -- will be established, and within 48 hours of a cease-fire parties must withdraw personnel, heavy weaponry, and equipment to 1-3 km (depending on terrain) beyond the demarcation line.

- Establishment of a 2-part "safe zone" that will require the withdrawal of troops and their heavy weapons in order to provide protection to the civilian population in and around Sarajevo. The inner zone would consist of the Sarajevo core, its airport, signifiicant power infrastructure, and the immediate concentration of civilians in the plain of Sarajevo. It will measure 15 km east to west and 2-3 km north to south except in the heavily disputed western part of the city, where it will measure 8-9 km north-south. All military personnel and their equipment will be withdrawn from within the inner zone. For the Bosnian Muslims, compliance would mean withdrawal of all military forces from the inner zone, along established "safe routes" (see below) through Serb-controlled areas, to Muslim-controlled areas in central Bosnia. There is risk and difficulty in demanding that the GOBH demilitarize the city as a quid, but the Serbians would probably insist. The advantage, however, is that GOBH demilitarization of Sarajevo gives us some hope of presenting this as even-handed, still neutral, and therefore it would not be necessary to end the humanitarian aid effort. This advantage holds especially if Russia participates in monitoring/enforcement. Moreover, since we might be seen as having entered the war on Bosnia's side, we might be able to play up disarming the city's defenders as balancing the pain on both sides.

  We should also consider, however, if we would want first to propose enforcement of the heavy weapons part of the London agreement, and save demilitarization of Sarajevo to offer the Serbians if they demand a quid. Another alternative might be to move not just the Serb heavy weapons but the Serb forces themselves outside the 30-Km outer zone, and allow Bosnian forces minus heavy weapons to remain in the city, perhaps with their strength significantly reduced and subject to monitoring by the Joint Commission. A variation of this would be to require all Bosnian forces (Serb and Muslim) to withdraw beyond the 30-kilometer ring. That would also be easiest for UNPROFOR to enforce.

Classified by OASD
Declassify on OADR
CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Although UNPROFOR military personnel will continue to monitor the boundary of the inner zone, civilian authorities under UN supervision will be responsible for maintaining law and order within it. The outer zone would extend to a 30 km radius from Sarajevo and would be patrolled by UNPROFOR. Teams of UNPROFOR members and local authorities will maintain civil order in the towns on the outer zone. All heavy weapons would be removed from the outer zone to beyond the 30 km radius from the center of the city and placed in depots under UN control. In practice, this would create a "doughnut" around Sarajevo into which Serbian units would not be permitted to move heavy weapons.

- Introduction of a 10,000-member UNPROFOR military and civilian contingent to undertake the operations listed below. This contingent will maintain its own, organic air support. (This represents a minimum force, according to the WEU plan, based on "confidence in political agreements." The WEU "worst case" stated that up to a division (15-20,000) would be needed.) This augmented UNPROFOR will be responsible for:

  - monitoring the inner zone boundary between Serb-controlled territory outside Sarajevo and the demilitarized city inside;
  - monitoring compliance with the cease-fire and with the ban on heavy weapons in the 30 km radius area; in the event of violations, UNPROFOR peace keepers would , through the joint commission, issue a warning to the offending parties, including a short deadline for "cease and desist;" upon expiration of deadline, peace keepers would shift to a peace-enforcing operation, using their broad ROE authority and air support to force compliance
  - opening the blue roads and monitoring compliance with the requirement of free passage along the "blue routes" from the city, to include operation of checkpoints and convoy escorts;
  - maintaining civil order within the inner zone with local authorities, i.e. in the city and its immediate environs. Civil authorities in the outer zone would be executed by teams consisting of combined units of UNPROFOR troops and local civil police authorities;
  - its own self-defense without issuance of a warning, initiated by commanders on the scene;
  - occupation of militarily significant points in the outer zone so as to form quick, mutually supporting reaction forces in the event of cease-fire violations.

{Note that these are the forces' duties assume compliance by the parties; compelling compliance or punishing non-compliance would require additional effort}

- Establishment of a Joint Commission for executing and monitoring the plan. It will be composed of the Commander of the UNPROFOR Sarajevo Command, a command and support element from UNPROFOR, and a representative from each of the warring sides consisting of the commander for the troops in the area affected.

- The opening of safe routes along the major transportation corridors surrounding Sarajevo in order to allow for the protected withdrawal of forces and weaponry, the free movement of UN forces and relief convoys, and the control of entry to and exit from the "safe zone." Safe routes would be from Sarajevo northwest to Zenica, northeast to Zvornik on the Serbian border (which is the main entry point for UNHCR relief convoys from Belgrade), southwest to Mostar, and to Split. Except to the northwest, these routes extend through contested areas outside the 30 km circle. (It would, theoretically, be possible to add other routes, e.g. to the east and northeast to permit supply to eastern Bosnia from Sarajevo). UNPROFOR personnel would establish checkpoints along these routes and at the outer limits of the "safe zone."

Declassify on OADR
CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

- Restoration of civilian infrastructure, with a joint commission of representatives of all sides and a UN civilian team determining priorities and needs and executing the work with civil authorities and UN technical experts.

Implementation of the Plan

The plan is to be carried out in 4 phases. Under the best of circumstances the full implementation could take place over a period of approximately 3 weeks. Though phases will follow a sequential order, steps within each phase may be carried out in a parallel manner, except where noted.

Phase I: Agreement and cease-fire

Step 1 - Agreement by the warring parties.
Step 2 - Cease-fire within 24 hours of agreement and a freeze on movement of forces and weapons. Within 48 hours of cease-fire, warring parties will move all troops, weapons, and equipment to 1-3 km (depending on terrain) beyond a demarcation line along the to be determined by the agreement.
Step 3 - Declaration of forces within 72 hours of cease fire, which will include precise documentation of number and location of personnel, heavy weapons, and a description of minefields.
Step 4 - Declaration of "safe routes" between Sarajevo and the 3 cities listed above.
Step 5 - Declaration of the inner and outer safe zones.
Step 6 - Declaration of fall back/assembly areas beyond the outer zone to which the warring parties and their heavy weapons will be withdrawn.

Step 7 - Establishment of Joint Commissions for weapon inspections and infrastructure repair.

Phase 1 should require 4 days to complete. Steps 3-6 can be executed simultaneously.

Phase II: Demilitarization of inner zone

Step 1 - UNPROFOR military personnel will move to the following areas: 1) the demarcation line to complete the separation of forces; 2) the outer limits of the inner zone to control access to it and prevent reinforcements to any of the parties; 3) the checkpoints along the "safe routes" and the entry and exit point to these routes. Along with inspectors from the Joint Commission, UNPROFOR military personnel will begin to move into the outer zone to establish positions for the later removal of weapons
Step 2 - UNPROFOR military personnel begin clearing "safe routes" of obstacles and land mines. They also carry out repairs on these routes where necessary.
Step 3 - Upon completion of Step 2, safe routes will be open to civilian and humanitarian movement.

Classified by OASD
Declassify on OADR
CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Step 4 - All parties begin removal of heavy weapons from the inner zone, withdrawing along designated safe routes to designated areas established by the agreement beyond the 30 km limit of the outer zone.

Step 5 - Only upon full completion of step 4, all parties will evacuate troops from the inner zone, withdrawing along the safe routes to designated areas established by the agreement beyond the 30 km limit of the outer zone. (As noted above, this effectively de-militarizes the city, because the Muslim forces must move out entirely.) The evacuation would have to be conducted in a fashion that does not upset the military balance, i.e., there must be provisions that ensure Serbian forces now in place would not be able to over run or seriously harass a city which had been left defenseless except for Muslim forces in the outer zone. Specifically, we recognize the potential danger of requiring the Bosnian government to pull all of its forces out of Sarajevo and relocate them in central Bosnia, whereas Serbian troops minus their heavy weapons wouldd be allowed within 2-15 KM of the city, with heavy weapons close enough to the city to permit rapid reinforcement if the ceasefire were broken at any point. Moreover, even if the present non-heavy-weapons balance in the outer zone would enable Bosnian forces there to protect themselves and the city, there must be some provisions for preventing influx of new forces, e.g., implementation of a military freeze and some kind of patrols of the perimeter to prevent a buildup.

Step 6 - UNPROFOR military personnel previously in place along the demarcation line and Joint Commission teams undertake inspections to determine full compliance with withdrawal of heavy weapons and troops. This plan allows for UNPROFOR to issue warnings in cases of non-compliance with deadlines, then shifting from peacekeeping to peace enforcing if deadlines pass. The U.S. would not participate in peacekeeping operations in Bosnia on the assumption that the parties will voluntarily comply with the agreements; the best hope for getting "voluntary" compliance is to have the muscle and clear intent to enforce if necessary. Because, short of a decision to sweep all Serbian forces (the likely violators of the cease-fire) from the 30 KM zone through major military action (which would probably require even more than the division planned by the WEU and serious -- read NATO -- command and control), UNPROFOR would be in a difficult situation: constantly faced with decisions on when to shift modes, asuming even a low-level of violence.

The shifting back and forth under these circumstances would see firefights breaking out between forces previously on peaceful terms, followed by a period of tense peace, and then possibly more violence, an extremely difficult scenario for small unit commanders.

The remedies for the problems outlined above might be (1) a universal, ceasefire followed immediately by political negotiations country-wide, to encourage the Bosnians to withdraw and the Serbs to cooperate; and (2) a crediblwe threat of overwhelming force were the Serbs to carry out even low-intensity attacks against Muslims or even UNPROFOR. "Nickle and dime" Serbian attacks producing clumsy UNPROFOR response as it trys to shift from peacekeeping to police to peacemaking and back is a recipe for disaster. Yet the threat to be credible has to be real (i.e., involving the U.S.).

Classified by OASD
Declassify on OADR
CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Step 7 - UNPROFOR civilian personnel move to inner zone to oversee the maintenance of law and order in conjunction with existing civil authorities.
Step 8- Joint Commission for infrastructure begins determining and mapping most vital installations for attention and repair.

The steps of phase 2 should take about 7 days for completion under the most benign circumstances, though necessary repairs on the safe routes may require additional time.

Phase III: Heavy weapons removal from outer zone

Step 1 - All parties begin removal heavy weapons from the outer zone. Weapons are to be moved outside the 30 km limit of the safe zone and turned over to UNPROFOR personnel at designated locations. Those that cannot be moved will be placed under UNPROFOR supervision. Military personnel will not be required to evacuate this outer zone.
Step 2 - UNPROFOR and Joint Inspection teams begin inspection searches within the outer zone to monitor compliance with weapons withdrawal/deactivation.

Step 3 - UNPROFOR/local police teams move into place to maintain civil authority within the outer zone. Such police teams could not guarantee that the outer zone would not become a dangerous no-man's land, with a largely Muslim population, Serbian troops, and UNPROFOR forces in an area of hundreds of square miles. UNPROFOR by its presence would have an obligation to do its best to preserve the peace between Muslims and Serbs, but probably has inadequate forces to cover every hamlet, in a situation wheree at least low-level violence and "settling of accounts" are almost inevitable.

Step 4 - Repair of Sarajevo's civilian infrastructure begins, using local help as well as UN technical teams.

The steps of Phase III should require 7 days under the best of circumstances.

Phase IV: End State (approximately 3 weeks after agreement)

UNPROFOR military personnel and Joint Commission Inspectors continue monitoring compliance of weapons removal from outer zone.

UNPROFOR observers are in place on safe routes and at entry and exit points or the safe zone.

Civil Authority is functioning.

UNPROFOR patrols are operating along limits of inner zone. (Note: the Joint Commission responsible for executing and monitoring such patrols will be comprised of UNPROFOR representatives, Serbian military Commanders, and GOBH civilian officials since, in the latter's case, there would be no GOBH military commander in the inner zone)

Most significant power, transportation, and communication infrastructure is functioning.

Comment

The Vance-Owen plan makes no provision for the number of UNPROFOR civilian and military personnel that will be necessary for its implementation. The WEU plan estimates that it could require a force of up to 20,000. It is questionable that current troop contributing countries, having provided 24,000 UNPROFOR personnel for the former Yugoslavia, will make 20,000 more available for Sarajevo. It will be extremely difficult to obtain 10,000 for the mission, but it could be possible under two conditions. First, almost half of this number could be obtained from the existing UNPROFOR contingents, with perhaps 1,000 from each of the four UNPA's in Croatia. Second, it will be easier to obtain more European and Canadian and other participation if the United States commits forces to this mission. These US personnel could be in the civilian UN component and involved in the supervision of the civil authorities in the inner zone and the rebuilding of Sarajevo's infrastructure. Even this small US contingent might have symbolic meaning and could encourage current participating countries to provide the remaining needed forces. If a small U.S. contingent fails to prompt other participating states to provide real military forces, significant U.S. forces on the ground would probably be necessary. Ultimately only the U.S. might be able to provide the credible "overwhelming force" threat cited above as necessary. We note in conclusion that it would be inadvisable to redeploy forces in Croatia to Bosnia; not only would that weaken the already inadequate forces in Croatia, it would send precisely the wrong signal to Zagreb and the Krajina Serbs alike.

ISSUE PAPER

INTERIM OBJECTIVES FOR BOSNIA

This paper outlines the pros and cons of adopting as an interim objective for Bosnia the establishment of a UN-supervised cease-fire in place, with the features described below, based on the principles of the London Conference.

Context. The current US -- and UN and EC -- objective in Bosnia is to have the Serbs sign and comply with the Vance-Owen Peace Plan. A key feature of that plan is that it requires large scale Serbian withdrawals from territory they now control and from which the Muslim population has been forcibly expelled. (See attached map) In addition, it would establish a new Bosnian state of ten provinces, each (except nominally for Sarajevo) dominated by one ethnic group, but with a complex tripartite power sharing structure, and it would entitle those expelled and refugees to return to their former homes.

Despite vigorous negotiating efforts, there is little immediate prospect of Serbian agreement to sign, much less to fully implement, the VOPP. There is, to be sure, some level of US force with which we could occupy the entire country, and force acceptance of whatever peace terms we like. However, there is no significant support in the Administration, much less in the Congress or among our allies, for sending a direct intervention force of this scale. While various increased pressures -- ranging from tightened sanctions to limited air strikes -- are being considered, there are difficulties about all the pressure options, if only because of the need to secure UN, allied, and/or Russian authorization or participation. Moreover, there is also serious question whether even the strongest actions being considered -- such as strikes against Serbian artillery and other heavy weapons -- would suffice to induce the Serbs to surrender by agreement much of the territory they have won by military force, brutally but successfully applied, in what they regard as a national crusade.

The Proposal. The goal laid out by the Administration on February 10 was a "negotiated settlement...acceptable to all parties." An alternative to continuing, given the present context, to focus our principal effort on seeking Serbian agreement to the VOPP is to seek, as an interim step, the implementation of key features of the London Accords -- a cease fire, limited withdrawals of forces, control of heavy weapons, free movement of relief, and release of prisoners. This more modest objective would be based on the urgent need to stop the fighting and civilian suffering, pending agreement on the future political structure of the country. It would also seek to broaden the scope of the discussion beyond Bosnia itself, to try to create stability in the Former Yugoslavia generally.

The proposal has the following elements:

1. We would seek to have the parties agree to a cease-fire in place. In order to avoid the uncertainties of the multiple prior aborted cease fire agreements, it should be negotiated in advance, and would come into effect on a phased basis in different areas and as progress was made in implementation (see Annex A for a possible phasing system). As cease-fires were established across the country, opposing forces would separate by withdrawals to pre-agreed lines (creating a DMZ between forces) and heavy weapons would be turned over to UN control.

2. The cease fire would be followed by limited Serbian withdrawals from around Sarajevo, as well as other places, such as Tuzla and Mostar, where they can easily cut off relief supplies to Muslim-held areas. The Muslim enclaves in Eastern Bosnia, but not Bihac in the West, would be evacuated. Other geographic arrangements are possible.

3. Muslims who wished to leave Serb (or Croatian) controlled areas would be assisted to do so. Similar assistance would be offered other ethnic groups who found themselves on the "wrong" side of a line of de facto control. All prisoners would be released, with some system to deal with prisoners who are alleged war criminals, such as having them screened by an international tribunal.

4. UN and other relief efforts would have free movement throughout the country. Humanitarian programs would be stepped up, and expanded beyond subsistence food supply to include restoration of basic services (fuel, water, sewer, power) and construction of housing, both to replace damaged residences and to accommodate refugees.

5. The US would, through NATO, and with UNSC authority, participate with other nations in an expanded UN force to implement the interim agreement. Deployments would be phased to match progress on compliance by the parties. The force deployed would be sized and configured (as is the notional VOPP implementation force) to overwhelm local resistance, not merely to monitor voluntary implementation, and would have ROEs authorizing use of effective force for that mission. In particular, once a cease fire had been established in an area, violators would be counterattacked vigorously, as would those who interfered with relief convoys. In the event of a general breakdown of the cease fire, i.e., of a collapse of the basic political agreement to end the war essentially in place, the implementation force would either be re-enforced or withdrawn.

6. There would be no effort to establish multi-ethnic civil authorities: De facto, Muslim controlled areas, including Sarajevo, would be run by the Bosnia-Hercegovina Government, while Serbian and Croatian controlled areas would be run by the Bosnian Serb and Bosnian Croat "governments" respectively. The exact control and relationship of Croatian areas is not certain.

7. A similar cease fire in place, with weapons under international control, would be established for Croatia, leaving the Croatian Serbs in effective control of the bulk of the area they now hold. This would replace the 1991 Vance plan for Croatia. Alternatively, no explicit changes would be made in arrangements for Croatia.

8. US would lead international efforts focused on securing an effective cease fire, limited withdrawals, and expanded humanitarian programs of the interim agreement, not on an ultimate political solution, and we would not, in practice, resist the de facto extension of Belgrade and Zagreb authority to the Serbian and Croatian controlled areas.

9. Economic sanctions and the NFZ would continue, as additional sureties for Serbian compliance with the interim agreement, to be relaxed in a phased process in conjunction with implementation of the agreement.

10. Consistent with the idea of creating a viable Muslim enclave state, the arms embargo on the Sarajevo government would be lifted, possibly in phases as other sanctions were eased.

11. The US would repeat its warnings about Serbian and other factions' misconduct in Kosovo -- and extend them to actions in the Vojvodina and Sandzak.

Although nominally only an interim agreement, without prejudice to final political settlement along the lines of the VOPP, the cease-fire in place, limited withdrawals, and population transfers would, if it succeeded, create a de facto partition of Bosnia, establishing de facto a Muslim enclave state, essentially within territory now controlled by the Muslims (less the eastern enclaves, and plus some territory around Sarajevo and other cities, e.g., Tuzla and Mostar) along with de facto Serbian and Croatian "ministates" with very close connections to Serbia and Croatia.

Arguments for and against.

The case against shifting our focus to a cease-fire in place, limited withdrawals, and orderly population transfers includes the following points:

-- The "solution" rewards ethnic cleansing and aggression, and indeed all but concedes the creation of a Greater Serbia, absorbing big chunks of Croatia and Bosnia. As such it is immoral, and likely to encourage further ethnic aggression in the Balkans and elsewhere.

-- It would be seen by many as a significant retrenchment by the USG. The outcry from the press and the international community could be significant.

-- The proposal will be strongly resisted by the Muslims, who believe they have - or should have - a commitment from the US to pressure the Serbs into signing up for Vance-Owen.

-- The Muslims may prefer to "go down fighting" rather than, in effect, surrender. Securing Croatian support will prove nearly as difficult as Muslim support.

-- The Serbs would be less likely to agree to the provisions of this proposal, notably the cease-fire, if the arms embargo against the Muslims were to be lifted.

-- In the event of a general breakdown of the cease-fire, a decision would be required to reinforce or withdraw the implementation force. Both alternatives represent an admission of failure with respect to the mission upon which we embarked.

-- Accepting so limited and unsatisfactory an outcome is wholly inconsistent with the Administration's past declarations that even Vance-Owen is unfair to the Muslims, and that partition is not an acceptable solution.

-- The success such an outcome would represent for Serbian nationalism would re-enforce all the worst forces in Serbia and encourage ethnic cleansing in Kosovo and the Vojvodina, and actually ratifies Serbian intransigence in the Krajina and the other UNPAs and pink zones in Croatia.

-- Croatia will gladly pocket ratification of its de facto annexation of the Croatian parts of Bosnia-Hercegovina, but it will not acquiesce in the loss of the UNPAs, or the creation of a secure Serbian Northern Corridor along the Sava. Even if the cease fire held in Bosnia, the Croats may resume military probes at the UNPAs.

-- The proposal is not even stable so far as the Muslims are concerned. Even if they accepted it now, on the ground that, having been abandoned by the West, they have no choice, they will never be reconciled to the result. We will have created what former French Defense Minister Joxe rightly called "a Gaza strip in the middle of Europe."

-- Implementation of the agreement, assuming only limited local opposition, would probably require about the same force as envisioned for the Vance-Owen plan, and face similar difficulties.

-- The Muslim enclave state will not be viable politically, economically, or militarily. The international community (with heavy reliance on the U.S.) will be committed to protecting it militarily and supporting it economically for years to come.

The case for the proposal includes the following:

-- Granted that the VOPP, or some variant of it that denied the Serbs the fruits of their brutal ethnic cleansing, would be the ideal solution, there is simply no prospect of its being achieved short of massive -- corps plus scale -- US intervention. Only those who favor such intervention, or have some evidence lesser pressures will work to produce massive Serbian concessions, can credibly argue against an interim solution on the ground that VOPP is not only better (which everyone should concede) but that it is attainable.

-- If the US is not prepared to support substantially the large scale international military intervention needed to force the Serbs to accept and implement VOPP, the only possible outcomes are (1) indefinite war, (2) a Serbian victory, and (3) some negotiated cease-fire with much smaller Serbian withdrawals than VOPP requires. Among these three - the only real - possible outcomes, the third is clearly better.

-- It ends the fighting early, avoiding the very real prospect of a final Serb push this spring to eliminate the Muslim hold on the eastern enclaves, and perhaps even Sarajevo itself, with all that would entail in human suffering and frustration of US goals.

-- It provides a framework for a greatly enhanced humanitarian effort, which remains the aspect of the US (and UN and European) effort that has the greatest popular support.

-- Serbians (whether in Belgrade, Pale, or Knin) will now probably accept an outcome which requires a real cease fire, separation of forces, control of heavy weapons, free movement of relief, and even some locally significant withdrawals. There is no particular evidence they seek to eliminate Muslims throughout Bosnia, so long as they get control of the territory they believe should be Serbian. They have (except for the eastern enclaves) now secured the territory they regard as Serbian by right, and could well be prepared to make modest concessions to solidify that control. Further military successes -- which are well within their capability -- might well increase their minimum requirements for peace.

-- While the Muslims would certainly prefer a more favorable solution, they recognize the desperation of their military position, and the unlikelihood of major military intervention. They will need to be convinced that they will do better to cut a deal now, before their situation deteriorates further.

-- A reasonably contiguous, internationally protected, Muslim state, while facing many problems, is more likely to be viable and stable than whatever would come out of another year or so of continued fighting.

-- Given the profound ethnic tensions in the area, and the effects of two years of ethnic war, an ethnic-based partition, however distasteful, is likely to be the only stable solution. (Even VOPP is an ethnic partition in all but name.) Better that it should be negotiated, and effected under international supervision, than result purely from military operations.

-- By frankly recognizing that large-scale population movements (mostly but by no means exclusively by Muslims) will accompany any settlement, the agreement can provide explicitly for those movements and for accommodating the people who move.

-- The financial costs of enforcing an agreement that has a better chance of actually being complied with by the parties, and of sustaining a Muslim state, while large, are likely to be small compared to the costs of the military effort that would be needed to force acceptance of the VOPP.

-- A de facto partition provides also a framework for resolving the Croatian-Serbian conflict. For all their horrible and treacherous actions, the Serbs have some legitimate grievances, chief among them being mistreatment of Serbs by Croatians on a massive scale in living memory, especially in the Krajina. Serbia will intervene with the old Yugoslav army to prevent Croatia from regaining control of the Krajina. A partition in which Croatia is compensated for the loss of the Krajina with de facto control of Western Hercegovina may well represent the best hope of a stable outcome of that conflict.

-- Reluctant international acceptance of a result that gives the Serbs much of what they feel entitled to, and resolution to enforce that result, will be the best basis on which to convince the Serbs that they will lose badly if they press their luck by making trouble in Kosovo or Vojvodina.

-- The proposal requires significant Serbian concessions, including some withdrawals and a willingness not to press their military advantage. The scale of pressures we are actually prepared to apply -- sanctions, lifting the arms embargo, NFZ enforcement -- are far more likely to be successful in achieving these limited but meaningful concessions than in forcing greater ones.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

-- Moving to a policy that would stress an interim arrangement along these lines is not inconsistent with our backing Vance-Owen up to this point. We have always made clear that we want a settlement the parties themselves agree on, not that we will impose our own notion of a good solution. The proposal seeks, in effect, to implement the key features of the London accords, which has long been US policy.

-- Moreover, there is a view that even if VO were signed, we would be doing very well if it produced, not full implementation, but merely Serbian action to meet the conditions proposed by DOD for commitment of a US force element, namely an effective cease fire, control of heavy weapons, separation of forces, free movement of relief, and release of prisoners. These elements of Vance-Owen would amount, in effect, to a cease fire in place, marginal local Serbian withdrawals, and the creation of a Muslim enclave under UN protection. In short, the practical difference between what it would be reasonable (some even argue too much) to expect of Vance-Owen, and the new proposal, may be rather slight. Moreover, seeking an interim agreement on these lines would not preclude continuing to treat the VOPP as a long term objective.

-- And it would allow for a negotiated settlement, albeit long term, to be conducted out from under the gun.

-- A policy along these lines has the greatest chance of winning active Russian support, which is important not only for its own sake but as a contribution to our overriding goal of protecting reform in Russia.

PROPOSED PHASING OF IMPLEMENTATION

- Phase I. This phase would consist of a cease-fire in place. NATO lead peacekeeping forces, under a UN mandate, would be introduced once indications of seriousness have been demonstrated.

- Phase II. Once a stable cease-fire is in place, peacekeeping forces (including the US/NATO under UNSC authority) can oversee the separation of forces and take control of heavy weapons. This phase should include the release of detainees and freedom of movement for humanitarian aid.

- Phase III. During this phase limited Serbian withdrawals from areas such as Sarajevo, Tuzla and Mostar would take place. Proceeding to this phase requires solid agreement on and cooperation with the previous phases. Any decision to proceed from phase to phase needs to be based on actions, not time.

- Phase IV. This phase consists of refugee resettlement and reconstruction. Although, in theory, it would be beneficial to delay these tasks until after the previous three steps are complete, we must "face reality."

    - The moment there is some freedom of movement for beleaguered civilians, they will flow to areas of relative safety.

    - The purpose of the resettlement phase is not to return refugees to their homes, but, to deal with the flow of those who find themselves on the "wrong side of the line."

    - Infrastructure repairs must proceed to the greatest extent possible, if civilian suffering is to be minimized.

- Phase V. This would be the final phase of the interim program.

    - Following resettlement and reconstruction of basic services, civil government would need to be reestablished on all sides of the cease-fire lines.

    - These civil authorities would engage in a continuing dialogue (no doubt of a long-term nature) to determine the future political and physical structure of the country.

    - This phase would, for at least the near-term (perhaps decades), result in a de facto partition of Bosnia. The current Bosnian government would control Muslim areas; The SRBH Serbians areas. The exact control and relationship of Croatian areas is not certain.

    - Sanctions, including the arms embargo, would eventually be fully lifted as to all parties.

Omnibus Sanctions Resolution

-- As requested by Russian President Yeltsin in his letter to the President, we will recommend to the President that we not press the omnibus sanctions resolution to a vote in the U.N. Security Council until after the Russian referendum on April 25. We will explain our decision to defer by the especially delicate situation in Russia just before the referendum, and use the time to press the Bosnian Serbs to negotiate seriously on the basis on the Vance/Owen plan. (S)

-- Secretary Christopher will write Russian Foreign Minister Kozyrev saying that after the referendum we want to bring the resolution promptly to a vote, without a delay between its passage and the effective date of its provisions, and that we will expect Russia either to vote for it or to abstain. In the meantime, Secretary Christopher will urge that Russia use the delay to press the Serbs to negotiate seriously and reach agreement in order to avoid tighter sanctions. (S)

-- Leon Fuerth will prepare a list of sanctions-tightening measures that can be taken without a new resolution. We will urge other Western states to join us in taking them. (S)

-- State will prepare a cable to capitals explaining our position, and Secretary Christopher will take it up when he hosts the other G-7 Foreign Ministers for lunch in Tokyo on April 14. (S)

-- If Russian Deputy Foreign Minister Churkin asks Ambassador Bartholomew about our response to the Yeltsin letter,

The following Principals Committee members will draft papers making the best case for the following options, which will be sent to Jenonne Walker for coordination/distribution by Wednesday, April 14:

Leon Fuerth: Pressing hard for a Vance-Owen settlement. We would use the threat of lifting the arms embargo as leverage with the Serbs. (S)

Secretary Aspin: Enforcing a cease-fire through air or ground action or both, along essentially the lines now held by the parties. (S)

Secretary Christopher: Making a major effort to lift the arms embargo in order to let the Bosnian government have a better chance of holding its own with the Bosnian Serbs. This option will include consideration of a new international forum or mechanism that might finally establish a peace after the parties themselves have found a natural balance on the ground. (S)

Ambassador Albright: Using American air power to help redress the military balance. This could be in conjunction with lifting the arms embargo (e.g., to protect the Bosnians until they could acquire and learn to use heavy weapons) or as an alternative to letting them better arm themselves. (S)

April 14 1993

MEMORANDUM FOR THE NATIONAL SECURITY ADVISER

FROM AMBASSADOR MADELEINE K. ALBRIGHT MKA

SUBJECT: OPTIONS FOR BOSNIA:

1. ISSUE FOR DECISION

Whether to use American air power to supplement an enhanced UNPROFOR presence in Bosnia and Serbia.

2. BACKGROUND

We have never tested the proposition that American military intervention might intimidate the Bosnian Serb militia and their patrons in Belgrade. That premise should be tested. Air power supporting an UNPROFOR presence in key Muslim enclaves ought to create a doubt in Serbian minds that they can pursue their objectives unchecked, a doubt that certainly does not exist today. If this is true, then we would be in a better position to bring pressure to bear on the Serbs to cease their aggressive behavior and sign the peace accords.

A military package which includes air strikes and internationalization of the enclaves could collaterally facilitate the delivery of humanitarian assistance to beseiged civilian populations and aid in the defense of civilians under military attack, one of our highest priorities.

3. U.S. OPTIONS

On February 10, the Secretary outlined a six point program for dealing with Bosnia. Since that time our options have been narrowed while the situation gets worse. Our objective was to level the playing field for the Bosnian Muslims, but while we have made significant progress on the six points, the tide of battle now calls into question the very survival of Bosnia.

Lifting the arms embargo, almost our only remaining publicly announced option, is our greatest threat, but it also has the greatest potential cost and may be the hardest to accomplish. Once we lift the arms embargo, we lose control of what would certainly be a flow of Muslim weapons, not only into Bosnia, but also into the surrounding area. The consequences of more arms could have significant ramifications for neighboring countries.

DECLASSIFIED
PER E.O. 13526
CIA Historical Collections Division
AR 70-4 10/1/2013
2013-0682-M (4 of 10)

4. OBJECTIVES

The limited objectives of air power -- unilateral or multilateral -- should include:

1) To get the Serbs to sign the agreement.

2) To demonstrate the commitment and will of the U.S. to prevent "ethnic cleansing" and erase its effects.

3) To help defend remaining Bosnian Muslim enclaves.

4) To provide retaliation in the event that Bosnia Serb military actions prevent humanitarian land convoys.

5) To help protect UNPROFOR from Serb retaliation.

Two significantly more controversial objectives would be:

6) To strike at Serbian military assets that are being used in an aggressive manner in Bosnia or from Serbia.

7) To strike at Bosnian Serb strategic targets (i.e. power nodes, communications and infrastructure in cities like Banja Luka) to demonstrate a real cost for continued aggression.

5. AUTHORITY

Recognizing that legal authority alone will not provide a receptive political environment, a strong case can be made that sufficient authority already exists under Article 51 of the Charter and the Chapter VII provisions of UNSC resolution 770 to employ air power for at least objectives (1) through (5) and perhaps (6) and (7), without obtaining new and explicit Security Council approval.

Having said this, we have to recognize that public denial of our authority by the Secretary-General or by the United Kingdom and France, would severely undercut our case that we have international support or authority for our actions. We may be able to get the support of our allies and possibly the UN Secretary-General, but only if we are willing to commit adequate U.S. military assets to do the job.

6. CONSEQUENCES

Air strikes could result in shutting down the land operations by humanitarian agencies and the United Nations and change the nature and role of UNPROFOR. But neither institution has the current capability to do much except to extend the demise of Bosnia-Herzegovina. Today the reality is that humanitarian operations are increasingly being blocked on the ground by Bosnian Serb action.

Further delay in applying a genuine military component to the Bosnian situation risks humanitarian catastrophe for Bosnian Muslims and the total collapse of most of Bosnia to Serb control. Failure to act will embolden the Serbs to overwhelm remaining pockets of Bosnian Muslims, target Bosnian Croatian-controlled regions, consolidate control over areas of Croatia still held by Serbs (like Krajina), and threaten Kosovo and Macedonia.

7. SUPPORTING INITIATIVE

If we are prepared to use air power, I would recommend a further initiative which would supplement and enhance the effectiveness of our control of the skies.

-- We should create United Nations Protected Enclaves. The creation of United Nations protected enclaves (defended by U.S./NATO/Russian forces under an UNPROFOR label) and supported by U.S. air power will be the only way to add the necessary ground component capable of saving these towns and regions from Serb intervention and assault. This would be similar to the security zone created in northern Iraq in 1991. Embassy Belgrade has strongly recommended that Srebrenica be declared a UN-protected area.

EXEC 2206

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

-- Resolution 770 of August 13, 1992, invokes Chapter VII enforcement authority to authorize "States to take nationally or through regional agencies or arrangements all measures necessary to facilitate in coordination with the United Nations the delivery by relevant United Nations humanitarian organizations and others of humanitarian assistance to Sarajevo and wherever needed in other parts of Bosnia and Herzegovina". This authority has never been fully utilized, but it remains available. We can manage "coordination with the United Nations" in a manner that respects the Secretariat's need to be properly informed and notified of U.S. actions. Further, the air power will have to be used in accordance with the activities of the United Nations humanitarian agencies and UNPROFOR. It would be mistaken to read the "coordination" language as giving the United Nations Secretariat a veto power on the "necessary measures" that States employ to get the humanitarian aid delivered.

-- Article 51 of the United Nations Charter preserves "the inherent right of individual or collective self-defense if an armed attack occurs against a Member of the United Nations, until the Security Council has taken measures necessary to maintain international peace and security". We would be acting in collective self-defense at the request of the Bosnian Government against an internal foe aided by Serbian authorities in a situation where the Security Council in fact has not yet taken the necessary measures to maintain international peace and security. Nor has the Security Council denied the Bosnian Government the right of self-defense. It has denied the Bosnian Government the right to acquire additional arms from outside Bosnia to exercise the right of self-defense. The use of Americans arms, for example, controlled by U.S. forces is not prohibited by the arms embargo resolution (713).

LIFTING THE EMBARGO ON ARMS SHIPMENTS TO THE BOSNIAN GOVERNMENT AND DEVELOPING AN ALTERNATIVE NEGOTIATING FORUM IN THE EVENT THE VANCE-OWEN PROCESS CEASES

Assumptions

This paper discusses options for lifting the arms embargo on the Bosnian Government and for developing an alternative negotiating forum in the event the Vance-Owen process ceases. It assumes (a) that the Bosnian Serbs will not have agreed to the revised Vance-Owen package by April 25 and that prospects for their signature will remain dim; (b) that the UNSC Resolution to tighten sanctions will be pursued aggressively as of April 26; and (c) that a negotiated settlement remains the preferred means of achieving a long-term solution in Bosnia.

Next Steps: A Two-Track Approach

If the Bosnian Serbs do not agree to the revised Vance-Owen package and prospects for their agreement remain bleak, one option is to press to lift the arms embargo as it pertains to the Bosnian Government, while simultaneously developing an alternative negotiating forum or vehicle.

The Situation on the Ground

When hostilities broke out, there was a serious disparity in arms between the Bosnian Serb forces and those of the Bosnian Government. The arms embargo, applying to all parties, has frozen this disparity in place.

This situation developed when the Yugoslav National Army (JNA) left behind some 85 percent of its stationed personnel (largely Bosnian Serbs) and a significant arsenal -- including tanks, APCs and combat aircraft -- when it "withdrew" from Bosnia in May 1992. The Bosnian Government, by contrast, had only those armaments it was able to seize from JNA facilities it captured. Those were mostly small arms.

DECLASSIFIED
PER E.O. 13526
VR 2/6/2020 (4.41)

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY
2013-0682-M

The disparity persists. Serbia and Montenegro have continued to provide fuel, food, and in some cases arms and ammunition to Bosnian Serb forces, which in any event are reinforced by Serbian irregular forces based in Serbia and Montenegro. There is clear evidence of JNA support, including the use of modern tanks, in the recent Bosnian Serb campaign in eastern Bosnia.

The Bosnian Government has no such steady source of supply, although it has received a trickle of smuggled small arms.

Following is a chart comparing the Bosnian Government, Bosnian Serbs and Bosnian Croats in manpower and weaponry. Forces of the "Federal Republic of Yugoslavia," or "FRY," and of the Republic of Croatia are also included. Note that these figures are estimates; no reliable counts are available. (The Intelligence Community expects to produce a Community-agreed estimate of forces soon.)

Regular Troops

Bosnian Government	40,000
Bosnian Serbs	42,000
Bosnian Croats	30,000
FRY	80,000
Croatia	60,000

Paramilitary Forces

Bosnian Government	50-80,000
Bosnian Serbs	70,000
Bosnian Croats	Not Known
FRY	Not Known
Croatia	Not Known

Tanks/APCs

Bosnian Government	35
Bosnian Serbs	575
Bosnian Croats	70
FRY	2400
Croatia	500

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Artillery Pieces

Bosnian Government	80
Bosnian Serbs	600-700
Bosnian Croats	70
FRY	1300
Croatia	200

Fixed-wing Aircraft

Bosnian Government	0
Bosnian Serbs	22
Bosnian Croats	0
FRY	400
Croatia	13

Helicopters

Bosnian Government	1
Bosnian Serbs	20
Bosnian Croats	0
Croatia	13

As indicated above, the disparity is most pronounced in artillery pieces and tanks and APCs. (Tanks are often used as stationary artillery pieces by the Bosnian Serbs.) The Bosnian Serbs have used the artillery to bombard besieged towns, such as Sarajevo and Muslim enclaves in eastern Bosnia, causing very large numbers of civilian casualties.

Arguments for Lifting the Arms Embargo

Reasons to support lifting the arms embargo as it pertains to the Bosnian Government.

-- Lifting the arms embargo would allow a sovereign state and UN member -- deemed by the international community to be the least culpable party -- to defend itself.

-- This move would fulfill our commitment to Bosnian President Izetbegovic to pursue lifting the arms embargo in some form if the Bosnian Government agreed to the revised Vance-Owen package but the Bosnian Serbs did not.

-- It might pressure the Bosnian Serbs to reach a negotiated agreement.

-- It would signal support for the Bosnian Government, therefore helping to sustain the Bosnian state.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

-- It would help redress the military imbalance, and might restrain Bosnian Serb military advances and ethnic cleansing.

-- In the United States and Europe, lifting the arms embargo would have more public support than direct military action.

Arguments against Lifting the Arms Embargo

-- Troop contributing countries -- including the UK, France and Canada -- oppose lifting the arms embargo, as do the Russians and the UN relief agencies. (Lord Owen, long an opponent of lifting the embargo, has softened his view since the Bosnian Serbs refused to sign the revised Vance-Owen package.) If the embargo is lifted, the UK, France and Canada are likely to withdraw their UNPROFOR forces, and the UN relief agencies are likely to withdraw their personnel, which would significantly harm the humanitarian assistance effort. (Of course, that effort might grind to a halt in any event if the Bosnian Serbs continue to be allowed to proceed militarily without significant impediment. Also, we could increase the airdrops to help compensate for the loss of humanitarian assistance.)

-- Lifting the arms embargo probably will exacerbate the fighting. The Bosnian Serbs could accelerate their military efforts over the short term, particularly by seizing Eastern Bosnian enclaves, and Bosnian government forces might try to break sieges.

-- Lifting the embargo might be ineffective in assisting the Bosnian Government militarily, given the minor impact of an increase in light weaponry, the time needed to train Bosnian Government forces in key heavier weapons (especially counter-battery artillery with its sophisticated radar) and the possibility that many weapons could fall into the hands of the Bosnian Croats. (The Bosnian Croats, along with Croatia, would oppose lifting the embargo on the Bosnian Government only and would seek to be included.)

-- Lifting the embargo might persuade hardline elements within the Bosnian Government to pursue the military track rather than adhere to the peace process.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

-- Absent evidence that the international community is willing to become involved in a militarily significant way, lifting the embargo could be interpreted by the Serbs as a way for the U.S. to avoid direct intervention rather than as a signal of resolve.

-- Lifting the arms embargo on the Bosnian Government will spark massive violations of the embargo -- and possibly further direct intervention -- by Serbia.

A Diplomatic Strategy for Lifting the Arms Embargo

The arms embargo was imposed by the UN Security Council. (UNSCR 713 imposed the embargo on Yugoslavia on September 25, 1991; UNSCR 727 of January 8, 1992, found that the embargo applied to all parts of the former Yugoslavia.) Lifting the embargo on the Bosnian Government would require action by the Council.

Limiting the lifting to specified "defensive" weapons, such as anti-tank weapons, might increase prospects for international support (though much "defensive" weaponry can be used offensively as well).

A diplomatic offensive on this issue should be sequential and should perhaps begin at the UN with the UK, France and Russia. Our approach to Russia will depend in large part on the results of the April 25 Russian referendum. (The downside of beginning at the UN is that we might get an instinctive negative reaction more quickly than if we were to begin with a high-level approach in capitals. This might be particularly true of the British and Russian UN representatives.)

Our approaches should include the following arguments:

-- The Bosnian Serbs refuse to agree to a negotiated settlement. They continue their attacks and campaign of ethnic cleansing, which are made possible by their military superiority.

-- The arms embargo has come to serve the military purposes of the Bosnian Serbs and the political purposes of their backers in Belgrade. It allows the Bosnian Serbs to seek a military victory and to refuse to negotiate seriously.

-- The Bosnian state needs not only the moral support of the international community but the means to defend itself; it has the right of self-defense.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

-- There is more public support both in the U.S. and in Europe for lifting the arms embargo than for embarking on direct military action -- an option the West may be forced to consider if events continue on their present course.

-- We are aware of the possibility that lifting the arms embargo could harm the current humanitarian assistance effort throughout Bosnia-Herzegovina. That is not desirable. If the Bosnian Serbs continue unimpeded in eastern Bosnia, however, much of the humanitarian assistance effort there will fail in any event. In addition, the U.S. is prepared to increase humanitarian assistance efforts -- especially airdrops -- to compensate at least in part for shortfalls in assistance. We will urge others to increase contributions to the airdrops as well.

After an initial approach to the UK, France and Russia, we should widen the circle to include Secretary General Boutros-Ghali (and through him, UNHCR Ogata) and other members of the Security Council. We anticipate that neutral and non-aligned Council members will be very sympathetic to lifting the embargo.

If we cannot achieve a consensus at the UN, we should make a high-level appeal (either from the President or the Secretary) in capitals of Security Council members. We may seek similar demarches from those who favor lifting the embargo (chiefly the OIC states).

If we fail to obtain consensus through diplomatic channels, we should go public with greater intensity to make the case for lifting the arms embargo. A public approach might rally opinion, thus helping to overcome the resistance of other Security Council members. A public campaign will at least signal the Bosnian Government that it has our support, may help convince it to continue with the negotiating process, and may help Izetbegovic against hardline elements. It might also pressure the Bosnian Serbs to return to the negotiating table.

Developing an Alternative Negotiating Forum in the Event the Vance-Owen Process Ceases

If the Bosnian Serbs persist in their refusal to agree to the revised Vance-Owen package and the Vance-Owen process effectively comes to an end, we will have to consider whether we should seek to (a) reconvene the London Conference; or (b) open a new negotiating forum.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Reconvening the London Conference

UN SYG Boutros-Ghali, Germany and Russia are interested in reconvening the London Conference to reinvigorate the negotiating process. (The German intention is to put additional pressure on the Bosnian Serbs and/or agree on new punitive measures; the Russians apparently see this more as a summit meeting to reinvigorate the peace process.) (An alternative discussed subsequently below would be to reconvene not the entire London Conference but rather the "Steering Committee" of the Conference.)

The London Conference of August 1992 was attended by ministerial delegations from the EC-12, the CSCE, the Security Council Perm 5, neighbors of the former Yugoslavia, Turkey (representing the OIC), Saudi Arabia, Canada, and Japan, the six successor states of the former Yugoslavia, and international organizations (such as the ICRC and the UNHCR). It developed, inter alia, an agreed list of principles and established a work program for continued negotiations in Geneva.

Pros

-- Since Vance-Owen grew out of the London Conference, it is possible that this approach could permit some continuity with Vance-Owen, possibly even allowing agreements struck in Vance-Owen to be carried over into a new forum.

-- A London Conference framework would keep the UN and EC engaged.

-- The Bosnian Serbs have said they would be willing to return to the Geneva talks, which grew out of the London Conference.

Cons

-- The London Conference is freighted with failure; the London Conference agreements were never implemented. Nor did the Geneva talks get far; the Bosnian Serbs' willingness to negotiate there may be a maneuver to gain time and stave off tougher measures.

-- Reconvening the London Conference means reshuffling the same deck. The Bosnian players and their fundamental differences remain unchanged, so there would be little hope of an agreement in a new London Conference negotiation.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Reconvening the London Conference Steering Committee

The London Conference Steering Committee has essentially the same membership as the original London Conference, except that the six successor states of the former Yugoslavia are not on the Steering Committee. The Steering Committee includes the U.S., Russia, EC, OIC, and CSCE representatives, representatives of the neighbors of the former Yugoslavia and others, as invited. Membership has never been fixed; it has grown over time, as the UN and EC drew in additional countries, especially those involved in humanitarian assistance to Bosnia.

The Steering Committee met at Ministerial level only once (December 16, 1992) and at the experts' level twice. Between September 1992 and January 1993, representatives of the Steering Committee were convened once or twice monthly in Geneva for briefings by Vance and Owen. The Geneva phase of the talks concluded in late January.

Pros

-- A high-level gathering of countries interested in -- and often involved in -- the crisis in the former Yugoslavia could pressure the parties to negotiate.

-- There is possible continuity with Vance-Owen, as with the London Conference itself.

-- This approach would keep the UN and EC engaged.

Cons

-- This has the same problems as the London Conference generally. In addition, the Steering Committee, like the London Conference itself, may be too large and amorphous to operate effectively.

-- The absence of the parties to the conflict could make this effort more international arbitration than negotiation. An agreement handed down to the parties is unlikely to stick, at least without robust enforcement measures.

Switching to Another Multilateral Forum

We could attempt to start again in a different forum, such as the CSCE, possibly on the model of the Minsk Group for Nagorno-Karabakh. (The Nagorno-Karabakh negotiation has a small group involving the immediate parties as well as the U.S., Russia and Turkey, and a larger group of CSCE members states meant to work on the negotiation. The Minsk Group has no fixed membership.)

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Pros

-- This would keep the Europeans involved and keeps U.S. efforts in a multilateral context.

-- This could still make use of the expertise developed in the Vance-Owen process and perhaps of the agreements reached there.

Cons

-- This effort would face the same difficulties as any other negotiating forum on Bosnia. The Minsk Group has not gotten off the ground, suggesting that the CSCE is not ready to take on this sort of negotiation. Nor does the CSCE have the same sort of implementation possibilities that the UN has.

Alternatively, we could try to organize a regional negotiation on Bosnia, involving neighboring countries, such as Hungary, Romania, Bulgaria, Greece, Turkey, and Albania.

Pros

-- This creates a regional, multilateral framework for negotiation while providing a clear break from the Vance-Owen process.

Cons

-- The regional states have much to lose and little to gain from such a venture. Many fear Serbia and some, such as Hungary and Albania, have ethnic minorities in Serbia, complicating their participation.

-- These countries have so many conflicts -- and their own agendas in Bosnia, as witness Greece and Turkey -- that it would be difficult for them to broker an agreement. Nor could they help very much in implementing an agreement.

The Bottom Line

Neither reconvening the London Conference, nor initiating a new negotiation is ideal under current circumstances: there is the unhappy prospect of lengthy, fruitless talks while fighting, ethnic cleansing, and the humanitarian crisis continue on the ground. Nevertheless, the civilized nations need to find some way to focus on this problem.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

A negotiated settlement would appear to be feasible only if circumstances on the ground were to change in ways that give the Bosnian Serbs reasons to negotiate. For instance, the combination of enforcement of the No-Fly Zone, much tougher sanctions, Russian pressure and a lifting of the arms embargo on the Bosnian Government might persuade the Bosnian Serbs to negotiate in good faith (although the Bosnian Government might, in those circumstances, reject negotiations).

Alternatively, if the UN presence on the ground in Bosnia could be beefed up and given a more robust mission -- such as placing UNPROFOR forces in besieged Muslim enclaves, as General Morillon attempted to do in Srebrenica, and using force if necessary to transit checkpoints -- it might be possible to stem Bosnian Serb gains and ensure better delivery of humanitarian assistance while negotiations proceed. This could mean that the negotiations are not marginalized by events and might force the Bosnian Serbs to the table if they cannot achieve their goals on the ground.

Finally, it may be that a negotiated settlement can only come about if the international community takes more muscular measures to persuade the Bosnian Serbs that they will not achieve their goals on the ground and will have to reach a compromise settlement with the other parties.

MEMORANDUM

TO: The Secretary of State

FROM: Ambassador Madeleine K. Albright MKA

SUBJECT: Bosnian Refugees: Urgent Needs

I greatly appreciated your phone call this morning. The choices we face are very difficult. As we approach the decision point in our review of policy options in Bosnia, however, I would like to make certain that we do not overlook the urgent need to take additional steps to ease the suffering of those injured and made homeless by the war. The humanitarian situation in Bosnia was a major element in your February 10 statement outlining the Administration's policy towards the crisis. It should be a major element in the new policy soon to be announced.

As you know, the humanitarian situation in Bosnia has continued to worsen and the number of refugees and displaced persons has continued to rise. Recent fighting in Central and Eastern Bosnia has resulted in new massacres and increased homelessness. Another 300,000 people could soon be forced to flee. The number of severely wounded is increasing, and more needs to be done to take in refugees from the neighboring countries, whose fragile economies cannot support the tremendous number of refugees.

Urgent steps to address this ongoing humanitarian tragedy should therefore be a key part of the Administration's policy towards Bosnia. I recommend that, as a part of this new policy, we announce the following measures:

DECLASSIFIED
PER E.O. 13526
2013-0682-M

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

-- Open U.S. medical facilities in Western Europe and the United States to Bosnian refugees in need of specialized care. An offer to treat wounded refugees would save lives while vividly demonstrating our concern. You may have seen a recent photograph in the newspaper of a child arriving in the United States for medical treatment. Assisting the critically injured in this fashion is one humanitarian requirement that we have it in our power to address.

-- Encourage the Europeans, especially those near Yugoslavia to accept refugees and provide temporary protection with the assistance of the UNHCR. To set an example we should offer to raise the immigrant quota for Bosnian or Croatian refugees and appropriate more funds for the care and feeding of the refugees.

-- Send a high level official to the region to discuss what more could be done with the governments of neighboring states. Croatia, Macedonia, and Hungary have complained that Yugoslav refugees have become an increasing economic and social burden. We should show these countries that we share their concern and are willing to help within the constraints on our own resources.

-- Finally, provide relief to Serb refugees as well as Croats and Muslims. Providing aid to displaced persons and refugees of all ethnic backgrounds will demonstrate that while we abhor the Serbian government we remain concerned about the suffering of innocent Serbs. Providing assistance to Serbian refugees will make it harder for Milosevic to argue that the United States is inherently anti-Serb.

I have attached a draft statement that could be incorporated into the Administration's new policy when it is announced. I look forward to hearing your reaction to these recommendations.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Draft Statement For Incorporation Into the Administration's Policy Announcement on Bosnia

I know that the American people have been moved by the immense human suffering in Bosnia and other parts of the former Yugoslavia. The number of refugees in Bosnia and other parts of the former Yugoslavia has continued to worsen with up to 3.8 million persons now dependent on international assistance. The number of refugees and displaced persons has also risen, and the fighting in eastern Bosnia could force an additional 300,000 people to flee their homes. The number of severely wounded is also increasing.

In order to ease the human suffering of refugees in the former Yugoslavia I have decided to take the following steps:

-- our medical facilities in Western Europe and the United States will be opened to refugees and displaced persons in need of medical care not available in the region;

-- we will encourage European nations to accept as many refugees as they can and provide temporary protection with the assistance of the UNHCR. To set an example, the United States will offer to take in additional refugees.

-- many refugees have found refuge in neighboring states, some of whom are finding it increasingly difficult to provide them with adequate food and shelter. I will therefore dispatch a high level envoy to visit the region and discuss how the United States can be of help;

-- finally, I want to make clear that our response to this humanitarian tragedy will not be based on ethnic factors. We will do what we can to help all refugees, be they Serbs, Croats or Muslims. While we believe that Serbia's aggression in Bosnia and Croatia has caused this war, we will not ignore human suffering among innocent Serbs.

3. VORONTSOV NOTED THAT THE PARAGRAPH CALLING FOR THE MORATORIUM ON THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THE SANCTIONS RESOLUTION OR THE LIFTING OF THE SANCTIONS WAS ONE TO WHICH MOSCOW WANTED AN EARLY REACTION. AMBASSADOR ALBRIGHT AFTER A QUICK LOOK AT THAT PARAGRAPH SAID IT WAS TOO MUCH CARROT TOO SOON. THE FRENCH AND UK DEPUTY PERMREPS STRONGLY AGREED. ALL THREE EXPRESSED RESERVATIONS ABOUT THE ADVERSE CONSEQUENCES THAT A CEASEFIRE IN PLACE COULD HAVE ON THE VANCE-OWEN PLAN. THE UK NOTED THAT THERE WAS NO MENTION OF THE USE OF REGIONAL ORGANIZATIONS TO ENFORCE THE CEASEFIRE. THE FRENCH POLCONS WHISPERED LOUDLY UPON HEARING THIS COMMENT ABOUT THE UK BEING INFECTED WITH "A SEVERE CASE OF NATO-ITIS".

4. VORONTSOV WENT ON TO NOTE THAT BELGRADE IS GENUINELY CONCERNED ABOUT THE SANCTIONS. YELTSIN'S STATEMENT TO THE RUSSIAN PARLIAMENT HAD HAD AN EFFECT AS WELL. HIS DEPUTY ADDED THAT PUBLIC OPINION POLLS IN THE FRY INDICATED THAT THE PERCENTAGE IN FAVOR OF SUPPORTING THE BOSNIAN SERBS BAD DROPPED FROM 78 PERCENT TO 30 PERCENT. UNDER THESE CIRCUMSTANCES VORONTSOV CONCLUDED THAT SOMETHING POSITIVE COULD COME OUT OF THE ATHENS MEETING.

1. ~~CONFIDENTIAL~~ - ENTIRE TEXT.
SUMMARY

2. IN A MOVE TOTALLY OUT OF CHARACTER, MILOSEVIC CALLED ME AT 5:30 P.M. TODAY (APRIL 29) AND ASKED THAT I COME OVER FOR A TALK. MEETING AT HIS OFFICE FOR ABOUT AN HOUR THIS EVENING. IN HIS NEW-FOUND SPIRIT OF OPENNESS AND ROLE AS ARDENT PROPONENT OF VANCE/OWEN, MILOSEVIC TOLD ME HE WANTED THE U.S. "TO BE THE FIRST TO KNOW" HE HAD MUSCLED KARADZIC INTO SCHEDULING A NEW ASSEMBLY SESSION TO RECONSIDER THE PEACE PLAN BEFORE THE SCHEDULED MAY 15 BOSNIAN SERB REFERENDUM. A PUBLIC

ANNOUNCEMENT WAS EXPECTED THIS EVENING.

3. MILOSEVIC CONCEDED HE WAS STILL UNCERTAIN KARADZIC WOULD AGREE TO SIGN. TO BRING KARADZIC AROUND. MILOSEVIC SAW ONE THING AS ABSOLUTELY ESSENTIAL: NAILING DOWN OWEN'S REPORTED ASSURANCE LAST WEEKEND THAT ONLY UNPROFOR FORCES (NOT THE HVO OR "MUSLIM GREEN BERETS") WOULD BE PRESENT IN AREAS WITH SERB POPULATIONS OUTSIDE THE DESIGNATED SERB-MAJORITY PROVINCES. THIS WAS ESSENTIAL. MILOSEVIC ARGUED, TO OVERCOME THE BOSNIAN SERBS' FEAR OF REPRISALS. IN ORDER TO SUPPORT OWEN'S EFFORTS, MILOSEVIC WANTED (AND HAD PERSUADED) MITSOTAKIS TO HOST A MEETING IN ATHENS WITH MILOSEVIC, TUDJMAN, KARADZIC, IZETBEGOVIC AND BOBAN. MILOSEVIC SAID HE WOULD WELCOME U.S. HELP WITH BRINGING ABOUT SUCH A MEETING (WHICH COULD HAVE A DIFFERENT VENUE, HE CONCEDED).

NODIS

3. I QUESTIONED IF UNPROFOR PROTECTION FOR SERBS WAS THE ONLY REMAINING STICKING POINT FOR KARADZIC -- WHAT ABOUT THE CORRIDORS? MILOSEVIC ADMITTED HE WAS NOT SURE THE BOSNIAN SERBS WOULD ACCEPT OWEN'S "BERLIN ROAD" OFFER IN LIEU OF THEIR OWN TERRITORY, ALTHOUGH THAT COMPROMISE WAS FINE BY MILOSEVIC. HE CLAIMED, HOWEVER, TO HAVE THREATENED TODAY TO KICK KARADZIC AND HIS CRONIES OUT OF BELGRADE AND SEAL THE BORDERS IF THEY DID NOT PLAY BALL. MILOSEVIC'S MAIN MESSAGE FOR US APPEARED TO BE THAT HE IS DETERMINED TO DISTANCE SERBIA FROM KARADZIC IF THEY DO NOT TOE THE NEW MILOSEVIC LINE. THE FACT OF THIS MEETING AND THE MESSAGE REPRESENT A REAL CHANGE OF PATTERN FOR MILOSEVIC, AND SUGGEST THAT HE IS FEELING THE PRESSURE AND IS GROPING FOR A WAY OUT. END SUMMARY.

NODIS

NODIS

4. AFTER RECEIVING MILOSEVIC'S PERSONAL CALL AND INVITATION TO MEET (A FIRST DURING MY FOUR YEARS IN BELGRADE), I AGREED TO GO OVER TO HIS OFFICE IN THIRTY

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

MINUTES. WE MET ALONE. HE SEEMED HIS USUAL CONFIDENT SELF. IN A GOOD MOOD BUT PURPOSEFUL.

5. MILOSEVIC SAID KARADZIC AND BOSNIAN SERB ASSEMBLY PRESIDENT MOMCILO KRAJISNIK HAD JUST LEFT HIS OFFICE BEFORE I ARRIVED. THE MAIN PURPOSE OF THE REQUEST TO SEE ME WAS TO INFORM US. HE EXPLAINED. HE WANTED THE U.S. TO BE THE FIRST TO KNOW THAT KARADZIC AND KRAJISNIK HAD JUST AGREED TO RECONVENE THE BOSNIAN SERB ASSEMBLY ON MAY 5 TO TAKE UP THE VANCE/OWEN PLAN AGAIN. THE NEWS WOULD BE ANNOUNCED ON BELGRADE TELEVISION THIS EVENING.

6. MILOSEVIC THEN PROCEEDED TO DESCRIBE HIS MEETING WITH THE TWO BOSNIAN SERB LEADERS. ACCORDING TO HIS ACCOUNT:

-- MILOSEVIC WARNED THEM AGAINST GOING AHEAD WITH THE MAY 15 REFERENDUM. A REFERENDUM WAS A "TRICKY GAME" WHICH WOULD BOX THEM IN. THE IDEA SHOULD BE DROPPED.

-- HE TOLD THEM THEY HAD TO ACCEPT THE REQUEST TO AGREE

NODIS

TO THE VANCE/OWEN PLAN AS IT CAME NOT JUST FROM THE THREE PRESIDENTS (MILOSEVIC, COSIC, BULATOVIC) BUT ALSO FROM THE SERBIAN ASSEMBLY.

-- MILOSEVIC ASKED THAT THE MAY 5 BOSNIAN SERB ASSEMBLY MEETING "ELABORATE" ON THE UNDERSTANDINGS REACHED WITH OWEN ~~LAST WEEKEND~~.

OWEN'S ASSURANCES, ACCORDING TO MILOSEVIC

NODIS

7. MILOSEVIC MADE CLEAR THAT THE KEY UNDERSTANDING, IN HIS VIEW, WAS WHAT HE CALLED OWEN'S GUARANTEE THAT IN THOSE AREAS WITH SERBIAN POPULATIONS IN NON-SERB PROVINCES, UNPROFOR WOULD BE RESPONSIBLE FOR SECURITY AND NEITHER THE HVO OR BOSNIAN GOVERNMENT FORCES (HE CALLED THE LATTER "MUSLIM GREEN BERETS") WOULD BE ALLOWED IN. HE CAME BACK TO THIS POINT REPEATEDLY DURING OUR CONVERSATION, ARGUING THAT THIS WAS

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

ABSOLUTELY ESSENTIAL TO PERSUADE THE BOSNIAN SERBS TO SIGN. SINCE THEY FEARED SERB CIVILIANS WOULD BE MASSACRED IF THEIR FORCES WITHDREW AND THE FIELD WERE WIDE OPEN FOR CROAT OR MUSLIM SOLDIERS TO ENTER. MILOSEVIC CITED THE SERBS' EXPERIENCE IN GORAZDE LAST SUMMER AS PROOF OF WHAT WOULD HAPPEN. (NOTE: WESTERN JOURNALISTS CONFIRMED REPORTS OF MUSLIM REPRISALS AND MASSACRES OF CIVILIANS AFTER BOSNIAN SERB FORCES RETREATED FROM GORAZDE.) ILLUSTRATING WHAT HE HAD IN MIND. HE SAID IT WOULD BE ESSENTIAL TO HAVE UNPROFOR PRESENT IN PLACES LIKE ZVORNIK, BRATUNAC AND KOZARA (NOTE: ALL SERB-OCCUPIED TOWNS, LOCATED IN MUSLIM-DOMINANT PROVINCES).

NODIS

AN ATHENS EX-YUGOSLAVIA MINI-SUMMIT

---

8. TO NAIL DOWN OWEN'S "ASSURANCE" ON THIS POINT. WHAT MILOSEVIC WANTS TO DO I'S HOLD A MINI-SUMMIT OF SELECTED LEADERS FROM THE EX-YUGOSLAVIA (TUDJMAN. IZETBEGOVIC, KARADZIC. BOBAN AND MILOSEVIC HIMSELF). MILOSEVIC SAID HE HAD SPOKEN ABOUT THIS SEVERAL TIMES IN THE PAST FEW DAYS WITH MITSOTAKIS. WHO HAD AGAIN TODAY (APRIL 29) REITERATED HIS READINESS TO HOST SUCH A MEETING. MILOSEVIC ACKNOWLEDGED THE INITIATIVE FOR THE MEETING WAS HIS.

NODIS

9. MILOSEVIC'S PURPOSE IN SEEKING SUCH A GATHERING (WHICH HE SAID DID NOT HAVE TO TAKE PLACE IN ATHENS) WAS TWO-FOLD: (1) TO CLARIFY THE UNDERSTANDINGS LORD OWEN HAD GIVEN AND (2) TO INCREASE THE PRESSURE ON KARADZIC TO SIGN. MILOSEVIC EXPLAINED THAT HE WANTS TO BE SURE THAT WHAT OWEN SAID TO HIM IN BELGRADE IS BACKED BY THE OTHER PARTIES. (OWEN HAD EVIDENTLY DECLINED TO GIVE MILOSEVIC ANY WRITTEN DOCUMENT RECORDING THEIR DISCUSSIONS.)

NODIS

A REQUEST FOR U.S. HELP

---

10. MILOSEVIC THEN ASKED IF THE U.S. COULD HELP IN

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

PUTTING TOGETHER SUCH A MEETING. SPECIFICALLY, HE WANTED OUR ASSISTANCE IN PERSUADING IZETBEGOVIC TO ATTEND AND ASKED IF WE COULD SEE IF VANCE WOULD BE AVAILABLE.

11. I RESPONDED BY ASKING MILOSEVIC IF HE HAD TALKED TO OWEN ABOUT THIS. SOMEWHAT EVASIVELY HE SAID NO, MENTIONING THAT OWEN WAS IN NEW YORK, AS IF TO IMPLY THAT HE WAS THEREFORE OUT OF REACH.

MILOSEVIC'S HARD SELL TO THE BOSNIAN SERBS

12. I ASKED MILOSEVIC IF HE HAD SOUNDED OUT BOSNIAN SERB ARMY COMMANDER MLADIC AS WELL AS KARADZIC ON ACCEPTANCE OF VANCE/OWEN. MILOSEVIC ROUGHLY DISMISSED MLADIC'S IMPORTANCE, CLAIMING THAT MLADIC "DOESN'T DECIDE ANYTHING OF POLITICAL IMPORTANCE."

13. COMING BACK AGAIN TO HIS MEETING THAT AFTERNOON WITH KARADZIC AND KRAJISNIK, MILOSEVIC DESCRIBED HIS EFFORTS TO PORTRAY VANCE/OWEN AS PALATABLE TO THEM. HE HAD TOLD THEM:

-- THE PLAN GUARANTEES THEIR SECURITY, SINCE OWEN HAD SAID NO HVO OR "GREEN BERET" FORCES WOULD BE ALLOWED ON THOSE AREAS WHERE SERBS NOW LIVE OUTSIDE SERB PROVINCES.

-- PARTICIPATION IN THE INTERIM GOVERNMENT WOULD RESTORE THEIR CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS AS ONE OF THREE EQUAL CONSTITUENT PEOPLES AND STRIP IZETBEGOVIC'S GOVERNMENT OF ANY LEGITIMACY. IZETBEGOVIC WOULD BE REDUCED TO BEING THE LEADER OF ONE OF THREE PEOPLES.

-- THE TIME HAD COME TO END THE WAR. THE BOSNIAN SERB COMMANDERS HAVE TOO MUCH AUTONOMY. MILOSEVIC COMPLAINED, CITING THE APPEARANCE ON TELEVISION OF A LOCAL COMMANDER WHO DENIED THAT SREBRENICA WAS BEING SHELLED -- NEATLY IGNORING THE SMOKING MORTAR BEHIND HIM. "IF I DON'T BELIEVE WHAT THEY SAY," MILOSEVIC QUOTED HIMSELF AS

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

TELLING KARADZCIC "WHAT DOES THE WORLD THINK?"
KARADZIC PROMISES PEACE

14. I ASKED IF MILOSEVIC HAD PRESSED KARADZIC SPECIFICALLY TO STOP ALL MILITARY ACTIVITY. ABSOLUTELY, MILOSEVIC REPLIED. KARADZIC HAD PROMISED TO RESPECT THE CEASE-FIRE. WHEN HE COMPLAINED THAT OTHERS WERE VIOLATING IT. MILOSEVIC RESPONDED THE BOSNIAN SERBS SHOULD NOT RESPOND TO PROVOCATIONS. MILOSEVIC VOLUNTEERED THAT HE HAD ENLISTED YUGOSLAV ARMY CHIEF GENERAL PANIC'S ASSISTANCE IN PRESSING MLADIC AND HIS DEPUTY MILOVANOVIC TO RESPECT THE CEASE-FIRE. MILOVANOVIC HAD CLAIMED TO HAVE REACHED AN AGREEMENT WITH UNPROFOR COMMANDER WAHLGREN.

MILOSEVIC PUTS KARADZIC ON NOTICE

16. I TOLD MILOSEVIC THAT I WANTED HIS DIRECT ANSWER TO A FRANK QUESTION: WHAT WAS HE PREPARED TO DO TO PRESSURE KARADZIC TO SIGN THE VANCE/OWEN PLAN? MILOSEVIC SAID HE WOULD BE VERY OPEN. HE HAD WARNED KARADZIC AND KRAJISNIK THAT IF THEY REFUSED TO SIGN, HE WOULD ISOLATE THEM. AGAIN QUOTING HIMSELF TO KARADZIC: "IF YOU THINK YUGOSLAVIA HAS BEEN SEALED OFF, WAIT UNTIL YOU SEE WHAT WE DO TO YOU. IT'S EASY TO BE COURAGEOUS SITTING IN THE (BELGRADE) INTERCONTINENTAL HOTEL, TRY IT FOR A WHILE AT THE FRONT WITH YOUR SOLDIERS." MILOSEVIC ADDED THAT HE HIMSELF WOULD GO ON SERBIAN TELEVISION AT THE RIGHT MOMENT (EVIDENTLY NOT YET) IN ORDER TO SELL ACCEPTANCE OF THE PEACE PLAN.

NOT READY TO RECOGNIZE BOSNIA

17. I THEN ASKED MILOSEVIC THE SAME QUESTION I PUT TO COSIC'S ADVISOR STOJANOVIC THIS AFTERNOON -- AS A SIGN OF COMMITMENT TO THE VANCE/OWEN PLAN. WAS BELGRADE NOW PREPARED TO RECOGNIZE BOSNIA-HERZEGOVINA? WHEREAS STOJANOVIC STUDIOUSLY AVOIDED A REPLY. MILOSEVIC SAID NO. NOT AT THIS STAGE. IT WAS TOO DIFFICULT POLITICALLY: HE WASN'T EVEN THINKING OF SUCH A MOVE NOW.

NODIS

DISREGARD COSIC

18. REFERRING TO COSIC'S LETTER OF TODAY TO PRESIDENT CLINTON PROPOSING A SUMMIT MEETING ON BOSNIA. I TOLD MILOSEVIC WASHINGTON MIGHT WELL BE CONFUSED ABOUT THE DIFFERENT SIGNALS IT WAS RECEIVING. MAKING CLEAR THAT COSIC WAS FREE-LANCING. MILOSEVIC DISMISSED HIS PROPOSAL AS "UNACCEPTABLE AND UNREALISTIC." HE SAID THAT BULATOVIC HAD CALLED HIM THIS MORNING TO ASK IF MILOSEVIC HAD BEEN CONSULTED ON COSIC'S INITIATIVE. WHICH BULATOVIC ALSO FOUND OFF-THE-WALL. "I LOVE COSIC AS A PERSON," MILOSEVIC EXPOUNDED, "BUT AS A POLITICIAN HE IS AN INCOMPETENT -- AN ELEPHANT IN A CHINA SHOP."

NODIS

MILOSEVIC ON SESELJ

19. ASKED ABOUT SESELJ'S OPPOSITION TO VANCE/OWEN, MILOSEVIC DISMISSED ANY THREAT TO HIM FROM SESELJ AND EXPRESSED CONFIDENCE THAT SESELJ WOULD NOT GET THE SUPPORT OF THE PEOPLE. JUST THE SAME, MILOSEVIC WARNED THAT THE ALTERNATIVE TO MILOSEVIC'S LEADERSHIP IN SERBIA WAS NOT THE DEMOCRATIC OPPOSITION, AS MANY IN THE WEST WANTED TO THINK, BUT RATHER "SESELJ AND FASCISM."

NODIS

CORRIDOR ISSUE STILL A PROBLEM

20. UP UNTIL THAT POINT MILOSEVIC HAD ONLY MENTIONED ONE ISSUE -- SECURITY GUARANTEES FOR SERBS OUTSIDE

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

NSC EYES ONLY LAKE/ITOH
"SERB" PROVINCES -- AS AN OBSTACLE TO KARADZIC'S SIGNATURE. I THEREFORE ASKED IF THE CORRIDOR ISSUE WAS NOW RESOLVED WITH OWEN'S PROPOSAL FOR A "BERLIN ROAD." MILOSEVIC RESPONDED AT FIRST BY BRINGING UP DISCUSSIONS HE HAD RECENTLY WITH TUDJMAN ABOUT THE POSAVINA (CROAT-DOMINANT PROVINCE THREE WHICH INTERRUPTS THE SERB NORTHERN CORRIDOR). MILOSEVIC CLAIMED THAT CURRENTLY THE POPULATION OF PROVINCE THREE CONSISTED OF 135,000 SERBS AND ONLY 30,000 CROATS. MOST OF THESE SERBS WERE REFUGEES FROM WESTERN SLAVONIA (CROATIA) AND TUDJMAN DIDN'T WANT THEM BACK.

NODIS

21. WHEN I PRESSED FURTHER ON KARADZIC'S ATTITUDE. MILOSEVIC ADMITTED THAT THE NORTHERN CORRIDOR WAS STILL A STICKING POINT FOR HIM AND THE OTHER BOSNIAN SERBS. AS FAR AS MILOSEVIC WAS CONCERNED, THE BERLIN ROAD COMPROMISE WAS FINE. BUT HE WASN'T SURE THAT THE BOSNIAN SERBS COULD SWALLOW IT. HE SAID HE HAD PRESSED OWEN TO GIVE THEM A SLIVER OF THEIR OWN TERRITORY BUT OWEN WAS ADAMANT THAT COULDN'T BE DONE.

NODIS

22. CONCLUDING. I TOLD MILOSEVIC AGAIN WE WILL BE WATCHING TO SEE WHAT HE DOES -- NOT JUST WHAT HE SAYS -- TO PRESSURE KARADZIC TO SIGN THE VANCE/OWEN PLAN AND ~~HALT THE~~ BLOODSHED

COMMENT

NODIS

22. MILOSEVIC'S UNUSUAL MOVE TO SOLICIT OUR HELP SUGGESTS THAT HE IS FEELING THE PRESSURE. AS HIS PROPOSAL FOR AN ATHENS SUMMIT SUGGESTS. HE IS GROPING FOR A WAY OUT. HIS PROBLEMS IN PERSUADING THE BOSNIAN SERBS TO ENDORSE VANCE/OWEN ARE REAL. NOT INVENTED. AND IT SEEMS THAT HE IS MAKING A GENUINE EFFORT TO SECURE THEIR FORMAL SIGNATURE TO THE VANCE/OWEN PLAN. I AM UNABLE TO JUDGE WHAT ASSURANCES OWEN MAY OR MAY NOT HAVE GIVEN MILOSEVIC REGARDING UN GUARANTEES FOR SERBS IN

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

NON-SERB PROVINCES. BUT THE NUMBERS OF UN TROOPS WHICH COULD BE REQUIRED COULD BE QUITE LARGE. IN ANY EVENT THE PROSPECTS FOR A HASTILY CALLED SUMMIT IN ATHENS OR ELSEWHERE PRODUCING CONVINCING NEW AGREEMENTS STRIKES ME AS REMOTE. RACKMALES UNQUOTE CHRISTOPHER

Summary of Conclusions

Review of Current Situation

Principals agreed on the following:

Review of Current Situation

-- U.S. has been following two tracks: the "Christopher" track and the Vance/Owen negotiation track. The Christopher Track has reinforced the Vance/Owen track. (S)

-- With the vote in Pale, focus must now shift back to the Christopher track. (S)

-- We will not let the referendum be used as a delaying device. (S)

DECLASSIFIED
PER E.O. 13526
2010-0533-M
RDS 4/17/2015 (1.07)

-- The course Secretary Christopher is presenting to allies is the only coherent and workable strategy on the table. It represents a set of measures designed to come to grips with the situation in Bosnia. (S)

-- The ball is now in the Europeans' court, and our task is to pressure them into action. (S)

Eastern Bosnia/Safe Havens

Principals agreed that the U.S. should not offer U.S. ground troops to secure safe havens since that was not a militarily tenable mission. (S)

They were divided on the extent to which we would consider the use of U.S. air power. (S)

-- Lake, Powell, Aspin, Berger, and Woolsey agreed that, in addition to the plan being presented by Christopher, we must be prepared to contemplate use of air power in Eastern Bosnia in support of the establishment of additional safe havens, assuming that UNPROFOR forces were willing and able to gain access to other enclaves in Eastern Bosnia (as an extension of our existing bilateral commitments to protect UNPROFOR forces already in Bosnia). (S)

-- Tarnoff argued not only for the use of air power to protect/defend UNPROFOR, both against category I and category II targets, but also to consider air power as punishment against category II targets -- decoupled from the arms embargo. (S)

Contingencies

Lake summarized options for Principals to consider as next steps if the Europeans completely reject the strategy being presented by Christopher:

-- Unilateral military action by the United States. (S)

-- Leave the Europeans to handle the crisis alone. (S)

-- Adopt one of the various European approaches (i.e., air strikes, blockade, etc.). (S)

-- Continue the present course (i.e., embargo plus diplomacy). (S)

-- Develop a strategy based upon containing the conflict to Bosnia (i.e., preventing spread to Kosovo). (S)

-- Undertake a campaign of air strikes for the explicit purpose of punishment. (S)

-- Pursue a cease-fire, enforced by the UN. (S)

DRAFT RESOLUTION

The Security Council,

A. Reaffirming all its earlier relevant resolutions,

B. Reaffirming also the sovereignty, territorial integrity and political independence of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina,

C. Having considered the report of the Mission of the Security Council to the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina authorized by Resolution 819 (1993), and in particular, its recommendations concerning safe-areas, *

D. Reaffirming again its condemnation of all violations of international humanitarian law, in particular, ethnic cleansing and all practices conducive thereto, as well as the denial or the obstruction of access of civilians to humanitarian aid and services such as medical assistance and basic utilities,

E. Taking into consideration the urgent security and humanitarian needs faced by several towns in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina as exacerbated by the constant influx of large numbers of displaced persons including, in particular, the sick and wounded,

F. Taking note of the request in this regard submitted by the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina (S/25718),

G. Deeply concerned at the continuing armed hostilities by Bosnian serb paramilitary units against several towns in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and determined to insure peace and stability throughout the country, most immediately in the towns of Sarajevo, Tuzla, Zepa and Gorazde,

H. Convinced that the threatened towns and their surroundings should be treated as safe areas, free from armed attacks and from any other hostile acts which endanger the wellbeing and the safety of their inhabitants,

I. Aware in this context of the unique character of the city of Sarajevo, as a multicultural, multiethnic and pluri-religious center which exemplifies the viability of coexistence and inter-relations between all the communities of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, which should be spared from further destruction,

J. Affirming that nothing in the present resolution should be construed as contradicting or in any way departing from the spirit or the letter of the above Peace Plan,

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

K. Convinced that considering the towns referred to above as safe areas will contribute to the early implementation of the Peace Plan,

L. Recalling the provisions of reolution 815 (1993) on the mandate of UNPROFOR and in that context acting under chapter VII of the Charter,

1. Welcomes the report of the Mission of the Security Council established pursuant to Resolution 819 (1993) and in particular its recommendation concerning safe areas;

2. Demands that the taking of territory by force cease immediately;

3. Declares that the capital city of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, Sarajevo, and other such threatened areas, in particular the towns of Tuzla, Zepa, Gorazde, and their surroundings should be treated as safe areas by all the parties concerned and should be free from armed attacks and from any other hostile act;

4. Further declares that in these safe areas the following should be observed;

a) the immediate cessation of armed attacks or any hostile act against these safe areas, and the withdrawal of all Bosnian Serb military or paramilitary units from these towns to a distance from which they cease to constitute a threat to the security of the towns and their inhabitants, *

b) full respect by all parties of the rights of the United Nations Protection Force (UNPROFOR) and the international humanitarian agencies to free and unimpeded access to all safe-areas in the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina and full respect for the safety of the personnel engaged in these operations,

5. Demands to that end that all parties and others concerned cooperate fully with UNPROFOR and take any necessary measures to respect these safe areas,

6. Requests the Secretary-General to take appropriate measures with a view to monitoring the humanitarian situation in the safe areas and demands that all parties and others concerned cooperate fully and promptly with UNPROFOR towards that end;

7. Declares that arrangements pursuant to the present resolution shall remain in force up until the provisions for the cessation of hostilities, separation of forces and supervision of heavy weaponry as envisaged in the peace plan for the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina, are implemented;

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

8. Decides to remain seized of the matter and to consider further steps as necessary to achieve the objectives of this resolution.

N.B. Asterisks denote deletion of part of a sentence. Former preambular paragraphs 8, 9bis and 11 and operative paragraph 7 have been deleted.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE SECRETARY OF STATE
THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE
DIRECTOR OF CENTRAL INTELLIGENCE
CHAIRMAN OF THE JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF
PERMANENT REPRESENTATIVE OF THE UNITED STATES TO THE UNITED NATIONS
ASSISTANT TO THE VICE PRESIDENT FOR NATIONAL SECURITY AFFAIRS

SUBJECT: Decisions of Principals Committee Meeting with the President and Vice President on Bosnia, May 8, 1993 (S)

-- Stress growing determination of allies and others to maintain and increase pressure on the Serbs, and that all options remain open -- thus leaving open the possibility of lifting the arms embargo. We will not legitimize the Bosnian Serb referendum as a reason for delay in agreeing on tougher measures, but as necessary will note that the delay is caused by European desires to wait until after that vote. Encourage the Europeans to endorse this position. (Secretary Christopher will phone EC Foreign Ministers May 8 and 9.)

-- Step up the containment elements of U.S. strategy. This could include placing U.S. Army personnel in Macedonia as part of UN mission to serve as a deterrentand perhaps with the express task of helping enforce the sanctions. (General Powell will recommend optimum mission, numbers and types of units or individuals.) U.S. will encourage allies and UN to push Milosevic to allow more CSCE observers in Kosovo. (Secretary Christopher will urge European Community members to take the lead.)

-- Test Milosevic on his promise to close the Serbian-Bosnian Border. This will include encouraging UNPROFOR to put monitors on the Serbian/Bosnian border, including the Drina River bridges. (By COB Monday, May 10, Leon Fuerth's Sanctions Committee will devise other specific steps we can ask Milosevic to take to make good on his promise.)

-- Congressional consultations. The President will try to meet with Senators Nunn, Lugar, Warner, and Bumpers and possibly Pell and Stevens. (NSC staff will prepare talking points.)

DECLASSIFIED PER E.O. 13526 2010-0533-M R 9/30/1 CIA Historical Collections Division ARB-M 10/1/2013

SUBJECT: Decisions of Principals Committee Meeting on Bosnia, May 17, 1993

1. Possible Meeting of UNSC Foreign Ministers. If a meeting of Foreign Ministers of the Security Council cannot be deferred, Secretary Christopher will attend. We will continue to make clear our belief that such a meeting should be better prepared but will not stay away if others attend.

2. Basic U.S. Policy. We will continue raising our preferred course of lifting the arms embargo on Bosnia and interim air strikes, making clear our reasons for believing it is the best course, but will not press it to the point of shattering relations with Allies or the Russians.

3. Possible Sanctions on Croatia. We will explore with EC capitals, especially Bonn, the possibility of economic sanctions on Croatia if Bosnian Croat aggression continues. Leon Fuerth's sanctions committee will begin close-hold consideration of how such sanctions might be designed, assuming no change in the situation.

4. Monitoring the Serbian-Bosnian Border. The United States will continue supporting the draft UNSC resolution on monitoring Milosevic's alleged intent to close the Bosnian-Serb border, but U.S. personnel will not participate in the monitoring effort. State will immediately clear a cable giving our ideas on how that job might be done. USUN will draw on that cable in giving technical advice to the UN Secretariat. The same advice can reach capitals via their UN missions. We would be willing to provide intelligence to a border monitoring force.

5. Preventing Spillover into Macedonia. Principals will recommend to the President that the Christmas Day 1992 warning to Milosevic on Kosovo should be publicly expanded to cover U.S. military reaction against Serbia in the case of Serbian aggression against Macedonia. JCS will provide a menu to the Principals of steps we might take to back up that warning. The basic recommendation to the President will be held until Principals can also recommend back-up steps.

6. Additional CSCE Monitors for Kosovo. State will mount a strong effort to increase the number of CSCE monitors in Kosovo. The U.S. will be willing to contribute to a larger monitoring effort.

7. A New Conference and Possible New Map. Ambassador Albright will sound out UN Secretary General Boutros-Ghali's thinking about a new or reconvened conference on the former Yugoslavia, in order to encourage him to call one without making a U.S. proposal to do so.

8. Air Support for Allies in UNPROFOR. The Administration will find occasion to make public (especially to Congress) the commitment we inherited from the Bush Administration to use air power to rescue Allied troops in UNPROFOR if they need and request it. We will not, however, agree to use air power to help defend safe havens that contain Allied forces, citing as necessary our basic reservations about the limits of air power and the lack of an end-point to the safe haven strategy.

9. Implementing Vance/Owen. Principals will give comments/clearance on the NSC staff's draft Presidential Decision Memorandum on U.S. participation in implementing Vance/Owen to the NSC staff. That Decision Memorandum will not go to the President, however, unless Vance/Owen seems likely to be agreed by the Bosnian Serbs.

SUBJECT: Decisions of Principals Committee Meeting on Bosnia, May 17, 1993

1. Possible Meeting of UNSC Foreign Ministers. If a meeting of Foreign Ministers of the Security Council cannot be deferred, Secretary Christopher will attend. We will continue to make clear our belief that such a meeting should be better prepared but will not stay away if others attend.

2. Basic U.S. Policy. We will continue raising our preferred course of lifting the arms embargo on Bosnia and interim air strikes, making clear our reasons for believing it is the best course, but will not press it to the point of shattering relations with Allies or the Russians.

3. Possible Sanctions on Croatia. We will explore with EC capitals, especially Bonn, the possibility of economic sanctions on Croatia if Bosnian Croat aggression continues. Leon Fuerth's sanctions committee will begin close-hold consideration of how such sanctions might be designed ~~if~~ assuming no change in situation.

4. Monitoring the Serbian-Bosnian Border. The United States will continue supporting the draft UNSC resolution on monitoring Milosevic's alleged intent to close the Bosnian-Serb border, but U.S. personnel will not participate in the monitoring effort. State will immediately clear a cable giving our ideas on how that job might be done. USUN will draw on that cable in giving technical advice to the UN Secretariat. The same advice can reach capitals via their UN missions. We would be willing to provide intelligence to a border monitoring force.

5. Preventing Spillover into Macedonia. Principals will recommend to the President that the Christmas Day 1992 warning to Milosevic on Kosovo should be publicly expanded to cover U.S. military reaction against Serbia in the case of Serbian aggression against Macedonia. JCS will provide a menu to the Principals of steps we might take to back up that warning. The basic recommendation to the President will be held until Principals can also recommend back-up steps.

6. Additional CSCE Monitors for Kosovo. State will mount a strong effort to increase the number of CSCE monitors in Kosovo. The U.S. will be willing to contribute to a larger monitoring effort.

7. A New Conference and Possible New Map. Ambassador Albright will sound out UN Secretary General Boutros-Ghali's thinking about a new or reconvened conference on the former Yugoslavia, in order to encourage him to call one without making a U.S. proposal to do so.

8. Air Support for Allies in UNPROFOR. The Administration will find occasion to make public (especially to Congress) the commitment we inherited from the Bush Administration to use air power to rescue Allied troops in UNPROFOR if they need and request it. We will not, however, agree to use air power to help defend safe havens that contain Allied forces, citing as necessary our basic reservations about the limits of air power and the lack of an end-point to the safe haven strategy.

9. Implementing Vance/Owen. Principals will give comments/clearance on the NSC staff's draft Presidential Decision Memorandum on U.S. participation in implementing Vance/Owen to the NSC staff. That Decision Memorandum will not go to the President, however, unless Vance/Owen seems likely to be agreed by the Bosnian Serbs.

Summary of Conclusions

Public Position and Messages to Foreign Leaders

State will prepare a public statement, for use when we have more information about Geneva developments (probably Tuesday, September 2), as well as letters from Secretary Christopher to Allied and Russian foreign ministers and messages to the Bosnian parties. All will include some common themes: (S)

-- General support for the Bosnians without seeming to endorse all their demands. (S)

-- Interruption of the talks was premature, and all should return to the negotiations to finish the job. (S)

-- NATO's air strike warning remains in effect. (S)

-- We will not consider any easing of sanctions until an agreement is being implemented in good faith. (S)

-- We remain committed to the War Crimes Tribunal. Full lifting of sanctions will require Serbian cooperation with the Tribunal. (S)

Additional points for individual parties will include:

-- State will instruct Ambassador Redmond to tell Izetbegovic that we are committed to helping implement a settlement even though we cannot announce a ground force role until there is an implementable agreement. At the same time, we will point out the opposition we are likely to face in the U.S. and urge him to say publicly now what he already has told us: that he would want the U.S. to help implement an agreement. (S)

-- We will warn Tudjman of possible sanctions on Croatia if both he and the Bosnian Croats do not return to Geneva and show more flexibility. (S)

-- Allies will be told now is the time to press the Serbs and Croats to go as far as possible to meet the minimum requirements of the victim of aggression. We further will argue that seeming to blame the Bosnians would encourage renewed Serb or Croat aggression, thus triggering NATO's air strike commitment and/or reviving our interest in lifting the arms embargo. (S)

Air Operations. JCS will look into another air exercise over Bosnian Serb troops, at a lower altitude than previous exercises, to remind them of NATO's readiness to act on its air strike warning if necessary. (S)

Sanctions Easing

The NSC Staff will work with State to further develop a concept of how sanctions might be eased if a settlement is reached and is being implemented, and what Serbian behavior we would require at each stage. A decision on when and how to share our views with allies and other will be taken later. (S)

The NSC Staff will ask Treasury to explore whether blocked Serbian assets can be used to pay war-related claims against Serbia. (S)

Implementation

We will make public our insistence that we will participate in implementing a settlement only if it is a NATO operation, authorized by the UN but under NATO's operational control. (S)

State will work with OSD and OMB to develop the concept of a voluntary fund to pay the expenses of an implementing force. (S)

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

When announcing our commitment to contribute ground forces to an implementation/enforcement effort, we will say that it is for two years only with a review at the end of the first year. (S)

In order to involve Congress early in a U.S. role in implementation, we would welcome a Congressional support for our participation. The NSC Staff will draft possible wording of such a resolution. (S)

The NSC Staff will verify that calls to staffs of appropriate Congressmen and Senators have been made, alerting them to a meeting on Bosnia and Somalia toward the end of next week. (S)

Balkan conference

State will prepare a plan for encouraging the EC to propose that a Bosnian settlement be followed by a broader conference to address the Croatian UNPAS and other potentially destabilizing issues in the Balkans. (S)

STRATEGY FOR LIFTING SANCTIONS AGAINST SERBIA

UN economic sanctions against Serbia, first spelled out in UNSC Res 757, were imposed in response to Serbian aggression in Bosnia. This has led many in Europe to suppose, if not to hope, that sanctions will be lifted once an agreement on Bosnia is successfully implemented. Some may even believe that sanctions should be lifted in return for a settlement itself, in advance of implementation. The U.S. has been careful, however, not to commit itself to any timetable for the removal of sanctions. Indeed, in the letter that Secretary Christopher sent to Milosevic on August 20 we were careful to state that "there can be no movement toward moderating the sanctions imposed on Serbia until there is a settlement in Bosnia, and until the international community sees that it is being implemented in good faith." This formulation clearly forsees the possibility that sanctions may survive a Bosnia settlement in Geneva, as well as at least the initial stages of its implementation.

A very good case can be made for maintaining at least some sanctions on Serbia independent of a Bosnian settlement. Although Bosnia has been the key focus of our attention over the past year-and-a-half, it is not the only crisis point in the Balkans. The struggle between Zagreb and the Serbs over Croatian Krajina and Slavonia has not been resolved and could easily ignite when attention is diverted from Bosnia. Kosovo, likewise, remains a time bomb waiting to explode. In the absence of a credible military threat from the West, any large-scale lifting of sanctions against the Serbs would remove whatever incentive they may have to settle these and other outstanding issues on reasonable terms.

The Office of the Legal Adviser at the State Department is now considering the question of whether the UNSC resolutions require the Security Council to take action to lift sanctions once an agreement on Bosnia is reached. Their preliminary assessment is that they do not. Even so, however, any attempt on our part to seek to maintain a comprehensive sanctions regime following implementation of a Bosnia agreement would be stoutly resisted by some of our allies, by Russia and by the front-line states, who have been particularly hard hit economically by the sanctions regime and who would be strongly tempted to ignore sanctions should a comprehensive regime remain in place. Serbia itself might feel inclined to renew the war in Bosnia or Croatia, or to begin ethnic cleansing in Kosovo, in retaliation for a robust continuation of the regime.

The challenge for U.S. policy is to find a middle ground that would give Serbia some reward for a Bosnia settlement, ease the economic consequences on the front-line states, while keeping in place a sanctions regime onerous enough to give the Serbs an incentive both to complete in good faith the implementation of the Bosnia agreement, and to negotiate prompt and reasonable settlements to the outstanding disputes in Krajina, Kosovo and elsewhere, and to cooperate with the newly-established War Crimes Tribunal. As is argued in a separate discussion paper, these settlements could be negotiated in the context of a follow-on Balkan Conference whose purpose would be to resolve in a comprehensive fashion the remaining political and economic problems generated by the collapse of Yugoslavia.

In a very useful paper reflecting the views of the sanctions community , which has already been distributed interagency, Leon Fuerth identifies steps that could be taken in removing sanctions against Serbia. These steps are not necessarily tied to any particular events, such as implementation of a Bosnia settlement, but lay out possible stages in the lifting of the sanctions regime that would be aimed in the first instance at easing the burden on the front-line states while maintaining significant economic pressure on Serbia. (See attached annex which ties the steps outlined in the Fuerth paper to specific events or actions.)

The Fuerth paper identifies three possible first steps in such a process:

-- lifting all restrictions against transshipments;
-- lifting trade restrictions; and
-- authorizing aircraft landing rights in Serbia

Implementation of the first two steps would clearly ease the economic burden on the front-line states, and would be of some benefit to Serbia, since goods would be able to transit the country and the Serbs would be able to import and export on a cash or barter basis. The consensus of the U.S. sanctions community, however, is that Serbia would obtain relatively little benefit from the lifting of trade restrictions, so long as it was denied access to commercial and development loans and credit. In the Fuerth paper, access to the various forms of trade financing would only come at later stages.

There also appears to be substantial agreement in the sanctions community that once a settlement to the Bosnia conflict is reached in Geneva, the front-line states will begin to ignore the restrictions on transshipments and trade, and be able to do so with relative impunity, given the political climate likely to exist in the immediate aftermath of a Bosnia settlement.

If the sanctions community is correct, we face some very difficult choices in considering what, if anything, to do about lifting sanctions at the conclusion of the Geneva negotiations. If we attempt to hold the line on all sanctions, pending a certain interval to judge Serb good faith in implementation, we would face considerable opposition from Russia and some of our European allies, and widespread violation of the transshipment and trade restrictions by the front-line states. This political and economic hemorrhage of the sanctions regime could foster an image of weakness that would make it all the harder for us to sustain the more telling financial and other sanctions that we would need to pressure Serbia into negotiating an end to the stalemates in Krajina and Kosovo. It would also feed popular perceptions that sanctions do not work.

On the other hand, if both transshipment and trade restrictions were lifted in return for a negotiated settlement, but prior to successful implementation, we could be left with little to offer the Serbs in return for successful implementation. The Fuerth paper identifies easing access to commercial and other financial credits and loans as the primary medium-range step we could take in lifting the sanctions regime. Although the immediate economic impact of easing such access might be minimal, we need to consider what its impact would be on Serbian willingness to move forward promptly to negotiate solutions in Krajina and Kosovo. There is also the problem of public perceptions. Were we to agree to lift restrictions against both transshipments and trade as soon as a Geneva settlement is reached, then ease restrictions on commercial credits and loans in return for moves toward implementation, it might appear that Serbia had been rewarded for its aggression in Bosnia, despite the minimal impact on the Serbian economy that lifting these restrictions might have.

One possible solution to this dilemma would be to lift the ban on transshipments in return for conclusion of a Geneva settlement, thus easing the most serious hardship on the front-line states, while tying the lifting of trade sanctions to successful implementation of the initial phase of the settlement (e.g. after 60 days). The return of access to commercial credits and loans would then be saved for a later stage in the process. With respect to other, fairly modest, steps that we might take, either immediately or in the medium-term, such as authorizing landing rights in Serbia, releasing impounded ships, and other steps of benefit primarily to the Serbs, it may also be preferable to wait until a later stage in order to avoid the perception that we are unduly rewarding the Serbs.

All this depends on what we think is sustainable politically, both domestically and within the international community. If we truly wish to move onward from Geneva to seek a settlement to the remaining issues threatening the peace of the region, from Krajina to Kosovo, all of which stem ultimately from Serbian aggression and misbehavior, then we must be willing to maintain a vigorous sanctions regime, which is the only real leverage we have over Serbian behavior short of the use of military force. This will require us to keep in place, pending a comprehensive settlement, those medium and longer-term sanctions whose removal would substantially benefit the Serbian economy. These include access to commercial credits and loans, access to development credit and the release of frozen assests, as outlined in the Fuerth paper.

As is argued elsewhere, convening a Balkan Conference to address the outstanding issues in the region and tying the lifting of remaining economic and political sanctions to the successful outcome of the Conference would place maximum pressure on Serbia to negotiate quickly and in good faith. While there might be interim steps to remove sanctions that we could take during the course of such a Conference, this could best be judged as the Conference progressed. The Fuerth paper provides a useful guide as to the order in which these steps might be taken. (See annex which ties the steps listed in the Fuerth paper to specific actions or events.) Presumably, in order to maximize pressure, we would want to leave the major sanctions in place until the endgame.

Since the Russians, some European allies, the front-line states and Lord Owen himself are likely to resist maintaining a vigorous sanctions regime in the wake of Geneva, we will need to make our case early and well. We should carefully but firmly explain to these key players, as well as to those likely to support us, that in our view a Bosnia settlement is only a step on the road to returning the Balkans to stability, and that unless we move on to effectively address the remaining incendiary issues in the region, in Krajina, Kosovo and elsewhere, we face the near certainty of renewed conflict, in Bosnia and elsewhere. Since the Serbs are the primary malefactors in the region and have the advantage in the areas of dispute, they must be given an incentive to come to the table. Sanctions provide the only credible incentive, short of the use of military force.

Ideally, we should lay out our entire sanctions strategy; lifting the restrictions on transshipment in return for a Bosnia settlement, lifting restrictions on trade in return for successful implemetation, and tying the removal of the remainder to the successful outcome of a Balkan Conference, the initiative for which we would launch at the same time. Since a Geneva settlement could be looming on the near horizon, we will need to move quickly to agree on and implement a U.S. government strategy.

ANNEX

RELATING STEPS IN FUERTH PAPER TO SPECIFIC ACTIONS *

Immediate Steps

-- Lift all restrictions against transshipment (on conclusion of a Geneva agreement)

-- Lift trade restrictions (within 60 days of an agreement, pending progress toward successful implementation)

-- Stand down (but do not disband) SAMs and other sanctions enforcement capabilities  (in tandem with lifting trade restrictions)

-- Authorize aircraft landing rights for Serbia (in return for progress at Balkan Conference)

Short and Medium-Range Steps

-- Allow commercial credits, loans, and other financing of trade and investments in Serbian enterprises (in return for progress at Balkan Conference)

-- Release impounded ships and planes subject to payment of costs (in return for progress at Balkan Conference)

-- Increase diplomatic representation and allow Serbian participation in cultural/sports/S&T exchanges (in return for progress at Balkan Conference)

Longer-term actions

-- Authorize services to and within Serbia (Balkan Conference endgame)

-- Release of frozen assets (Balkan Conference endgame)

-- Disbanding the Adriatic patrol and SAMs (Balkan Conference endgame)

-- Assess to development credit (Balkan Conference endgame)

* See also the Fuerth paper, which ties each of the above steps to their respective UNSC sanctions resolutions and estimates how difficult it would be to reimpose the sanctions in question once they are lifted.

 This step was inadvertently misplaced in the Fuerth paper.

Maintaining Sanctions After a Bosnian Settlement

ISSUE

The question has arisen whether there would be a legal basis under the current UN sanctions regime for maintaining UN sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (Serbia and Montenegro) ("FRY") even after an agreement on ending the conflict in Bosnia is reached and implemented.

SUMMARY AND CONCLUSION

Under the current sanctions regime, Security Council action is required to lift sanctions even after an agreement on ending the conflict has been reached and implemented. While some of the relevant resolutions indicated that sanctions are to be lifted by the Council when the FRY and Bosnian irregular forces have taken certain actions, and when a peace has been achieved which respects the principle that any change of borders by force is not acceptable, it is up to the Council to decide whether those conditions have been fulfilled. Moreover, subsequent resolutions impose other demands on the FRY relating to the restoration of peace which must be considered in connection with any action to lift sanctions. In that respect, it is important to note that the Council is free to continue the sanctions, or modify them as it sees fit in the exercise of its responsibility to restore and maintain international peace and security. Any such actions would be subject to the concurrence of the USG.

DISCUSSION

The UN Security Council has imposed an economic embargo and related sanctions on the FRY since May 1992, by virtue of Resolution 757. That resolution imposes, inter alia, a wide-ranging ban on imports of FRY products; prohibits provision of financial or economic resources to FRY entities; and restricts flights to and from the FRY. Subsequent resolutions strengthened or expanded the economic sanctions. Resolution 760 clarified the humanitarian aid exception in Res. 757. Resolution 787 prohibited transshipment of, inter alia, crude oil, coal, iron, steel, chemicals, vehicles and aircraft unless authorized by the UN Sanction Committee, and ordered the halting for inspection of maritime shipping to and from the FRY. Resolution 820 significantly tightened the sanctions by requiring all transshipments of commodities and products through the FRY on the Danube to be authorized by the Sanctions Committee; ordered the freezing of FRY government and commercial funds found outside the FRY; limited transport of goods across FRY land borders or through its ports; and prohibited the provision of services to any person or body for purposes of any business carried on in the FRY. In addition, an arms embargo has been in effect with respect to all of the former Yugoslavia since September of 1991 (Res. 713).

The language of the Security Council resolutions in the case of Yugoslavia is clear that sanctions continue absent affirmative Security Council action to terminate them. Resolution 757 provides, in paragraph 3, that the sanctions in Res. 757 "shall apply until the Security Council decides that the authorities in the [FRY], including the Yugoslav People's Army (JNA), have taken effective measures to fulfill the requirements of resolution 752 (1992)." Resolution 820 similarly provides that the Security Council would review the economic sanctions with a view to lifting them once the peace plan then under consideration was implemented.

By calling expressly for a Security Council decision, Resolution 757 eliminates a potential ambiguity regarding termination which was present in earlier sanctions regimes. In the case of the economic sanctions imposed against southern Rhodesia, for example, the Security Council did not specify when sanctions would lapse, but stated that their purpose was the termination of the rebellion by the white minority of Rhodesia against UK rule. The United States, the UK and other Western states took the position that sanctions lapsed when the rebellion ended, without the need for further action, and unilaterally lifted sanctions. A number of African states disagreed with that interpretation of the resolutions and criticized the UK and the United States for their actions. To put the matter to rest, the United States and UK agreed to the adoption by the Security Council of a resolution formally terminating the sanctions. The Rhodesian experience provides a precedent in support of the argument that the Yugoslav sanctions continue until the Security Council says otherwise. In the case of Iraq, under Resolution 661 the Council decided to "take the following measures [i.e., the implementation of the sanctions regime] to secure compliance with paragraph 2 of resolution 660 [which required Iraq to withdraw its forces from Kuwait]." The Council remedied any ambiguity in that case by explicitly continuing sanctions, following the end of the conflict, in Resolution 687.

The "requirements of resolution 752" which are to be fulfilled include an end to the fighting, respect for the cease-fire, cooperation in bringing about "a negotiated political solution respecting the principle that any change of borders by force is not acceptable," cessation of outside interference and respect for the territorial integrity of Bosnia-Herzegovina, and withdrawal or disbanding of JNA and Croation Army forces in Bosnia.

To the extent the United States or another country appears to depart from the factors explicitly set forth in Resolutions 752 and 820 in deciding whether to lift sanctions, other states may object, insisting that these factors should be the primary or sole basis of the Council's deliberations. However, the language of the resolutions, and the evolving context in which the sanctions were established and implemented, supports the conclusion that the Council is not bound by only those considerations.

In retrospect one could take the broader view that the "requirements" of Res. 752 are not limited to the specific "demands" in that resolution but include the more general responsibility of the FRY to cooperate in eliminating the threat to international peace and security in Bosnia. In this respect, it is important to note that the conditions specified in Res. 752 reflect circumstances as they were in May, 1992. Those circumstances have changed, and have resulted in the adoption of over thirty additional Council resolutions on this crisis, many of which make new demands on the parties to the hostilities and strengthen or expand sanctions. Paragraph 6 of Res. 859, for example, lists a number of factors as relevant to "a solution to the conflict," including the principle of individual responsibility for war crimes.

This broader view finds support in Res. 820, in which the Security Council > expresses its readiness, after all three Bosnian parties have accepted the peace plan and on the basis of verified evidence . . . that the Bosnian Serb party is cooperating in good faith in effective implementation of the plan, to review all the measures in the present resolution and its other relevant resolutions with a view to gradually lifting them . . . . (Para. 31.)

This provision appears to go beyond the precise demands of Res. 752 in contemplating that the Bosnian Serb party is cooperating in good faith in implementation of the plan, as opposed merely to negotiation. Moreover, insofar as it merely sets forth the Security Council's readiness to "review" the measures, as opposed to expressing a definite intention clearly or immediately to lift them, Res. 820 suggests that other factors may be taken into account at that stage.

In any event, the Security Council, in exercising its responsibility for the restoration and maintenance of peace, is not bound to consider only the conditions specified in Res. 752 in deciding whether to lift the sanctions in whole or in part, but is free to continue, revise or terminate the sanctions as it deems appropriate. The Security Council may decide, for example, that international peace and security cannot be secured until the FRY in fact ceases its efforts in support of the territorial ambitions of the Bosnian Serbs, or in aid of ethnic cleansing, and demonstrates cooperation with the War Crimes Tribunal.

Summary of Conclusions

If the Invincible agreement is accepted by all Bosnian parties, we will not claim a triumph for American diplomacy or describe the settlement as meeting all our wishes or principles. We will, however, note that American policies and actions have helped produce a better deal for Bosnia's Muslims and those who still want a multi-religious society than would otherwise have been the case. If accepted, the agreement can produce a situation that is better than another winter of war. (S)

Congressional Liaison Staffs of all agencies will telephone key Hill Staffers to (a) tell them what we know of the Invincible agreement; (b) note that new aspects of the agreement address key Bosnian government concerns (access to the Adriatic and links with Muslim-majority enclaves in eastern Bosnia); (c) say that while the Bosnian Parliament still must accept the agreement, if it does prove satisfactory to them, it would in our judgment be better than another winter of war. This will be done promptly, before Hill friends of Bosnia in particular make public statements critical of the agreement that could make it harder for them to support our role in implementation. (S)

During the Hill leadership consultations scheduled for Thursday, September 23, we will present our conditions for participating in implementation/enforcement. (OSD to provide written text Tuesday, September 21, for Principals' review.) (S)

Principals reaffirmed their earlier decision that we would welcome a Congressional resolution of support for U.S. participation in implementation/enforcement, and further agreed that it would be useful with Allies if the resolution contains our conditions for participation. NSC staff will revise its draft Congressional resolution accordingly. (S)

While we do not require prior Congressional approval for American participation, if Congress passes a resolution opposing it, we will not proceed. (S)

OMB will assess whether it is possible and/or desirable to combine a resolution supporting American participation with a supplemental. (S)

OMB and OSD will prepare a recommendation on funding options on Tuesday, September 21. (S)

DOD will reassess NATO plans for unified command throughout the FRY. (S)

Tony--

Please note item 7 (funding option) in particular. It's what my notes say and what Aspin and Panetta both told their staffs. But I wasn't sure the Principals were focusing when they got to that issue. Aspin told his staff "but it doesn't make sense". And Gordon Adams thinks it unlikely the Hill will let us get away with counting our 18,000 air and naval personnel as part of the supplemental but not part of our contribution to the implementation force.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE PEACE AGREEMENT FOR BOSNIA AND HERZEGOVINA

1. The present draft of the Peace Agreement (S/26337/Add.1 of 23 August 1993) provides for a variety of multinational bodies to support implementation of the Agreement:

(a) the military aspects are almost entirely allocated to UNPROFOR. They include:

(i) monitoring, and adjudicating disputes relating to, a cease-fire, separation of forces and withdrawal of heavy weapons;

(ii) supervising, with the European Community (which already has a monitoring mission in the Former Yugoslavia), the progressive disarmament and disbandment of all military forces in the proposed Union of Republics of Bosnia and Herzegovina (URBH);

(iii) establishing complete freedom of movement and escorting convoys as necessary;

(iv) monitoring the borders of the URBH;

(v) chairing, and reporting to the United Nations on, a Joint Commission;

(b) the police aspects, consisting primarily of monitoring the police of the Constituent Republics and the Sarajevo District, are allocated to the civilian police element (UNCIVPOL) of UNPROFOR;

(c) the human rights aspects are mainly allocated to the United Nations, whose Secretary-General would establish an International Human Rights Monitoring Mission to be deployed throughout the territory of the URBH; but responsibilities are also allocated to the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe (appointment of judges to the Human Rights Court) and to the Co-Chairmen of the Steering Committee of the ICFY (appointment of Ombudsmen and receipt of reports from them);

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

(d) the supervision of elections is allocated to the United Nations and the European Community;

(e) the boundary aspects, primarily the appointment of a Boundary Commission and the arbitration of disputes, are allocated to the United Nations;

(f) the administration of Sarajevo is allocated to the United Nations and that of Mostar to the European Community;

(g) UNHCR would continue to take the lead in humanitarian efforts.

2. It is assumed that the parties' record of non-cooperation with previous United Nations and European Community efforts means that a decision by the Security Council to support implementation of the Agreement would have to be taken under Chapter VII of the Charter. On this basis, the UNPROFOR Force Commander and NATO's CINCSOUTH estimate that the military aspects would require a force of approximately 60,000 all ranks, that is an addition of some 50,000 to UNPROFOR's current strength in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

3. An initial estimate by UNPROFOR is that the requirement for police officers could be as high as 2,900 (of whom 250 would be for Sarajevo) but this estimate may be revised downwards after further study.

4. Several hundred international professional staff would be required for the civilian operations listed at (c) to (f) in paragraph 1, especially the Human Rights Monitoring Mission.

5. The cost of an operation on this scale (excluding humanitarian efforts and the costs of rehabilitation and reconstruction) would probably be in the range of $4-5 billion per annum.

6. The Security Council's decision on how best to support implementation of the Peace Agreement will need to take into account the following factors:

(a) the readiness of Member States to make the necessary military and civilian personnel, with the necessary equipment, available to the United Nations;

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

(b) the United Nations' ability to deploy them on time, with the necessary logistic support, and thereafter to exercise effective political, operational and administrative control;

(c) the availability of the necessary finance from Member States;

(d) the impact of this operation on the other peace-keeping operations which the Organization is already undertaking;

It may also be necessary to take into account the Bosnian Serb side's strong preference for an operation under United Nations control.

7. Recent difficulties in obtaining personnel for other missions suggest that the current deployment of United Nations peace-keeping troops and police (about 75,000 and 3,500 respectively) may be close to the limit of what the international community is ready to make available, at any rate when the Organization is unable to reimburse to troop-contributing Governments the sums due to them. It has also become clear that rather few Member States are in a position to contribute troops equipped for a potential combat mission under Chapter VII of the Charter and that some of those have reservations about placing their troops under United Nations command and control in such a mission.

8. It has also been increasingly difficult for the Organization to obtain, from its own resources or from Member States, the civilian personnel needed for peace-keeping operations. The complexity of its personnel procedures can also cause additional delays. Six months after UNTAC began to function in Cambodia, nearly a fifth of its international civilian personnel had still not arrived in the country. Three months after it was decided that ONUSAL's electoral division required 36 international professionals, only 11 had been deployed.

9. The rapid expansion of United Nations peace-keeping activity (currently running at six times the level of four years ago) has exceeded the Secretariat's capacity to manage operations on this scale. Before additional major commitments are accepted, it will be necessary to build up the staff of the Departments concerned and to streamline existing procedures for administration, procurement and personnel management, all of which will require the support and cooperation of Member States. The operation envisaged for Bosnia and Herzegovina would almost double the Organization's peace-keeping commitments. The Secretariat does not at present have the capacity for this.

10. Nor does recent experience provide grounds for believing that the Member States would be ready to finance a United Nations operation on this scale through assessed contributions. Current arrears on the peace-keeping accounts amount to about $1.5 billion. Of the amounts assessed for UNPROFOR since its inception, only 45% has been paid. With non-payment on this scale having become routine, would Member States find another $4-5 billion a year for Bosnia and Herzegovina?

11. Against this background, the Security Council has three broad options for organizing an operation to support implementation of the Peace Agreement.

12. The first option would be to establish a normal United Nations field operation, comprising military, police and civilian elements, all of them under United Nations command and control exercised through a Special Representative of the Secretary-General, using the United Nations flag and financed by Member States collectively through assessed contributions; in short, an operation similar to those in Namibia and Cambodia. However, as indicated above, this option would require the Organization to take on a task for which the necessary personnel and finance would not be available and for whose command, control and management it would not have the necessary capacity.

13. The second option would be to establish a United Nations operation on the lines described in the preceding paragraph, except that the Council would request the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) to carry out the military functions. No precedent for such an arrangement exists and there are a number of variables on which agreement would have to be reached between the Security Council and the North Atlantic Council before the operation was established. For instance:

(a) the extent to which the concept of operations, rules of engagement etc. of the NATO force would require Security Council approval;

(b) the degree of United Nations political control of the force in the field and how it would be exercised;

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

(c) the extent to which the NATO force could operate under the United Nations flag?

(d) arrangements for coordination between the military elements (which would be under NATO command) and the police and civilian elements (which would be under United Nations command). Would there for instance be an integrated logistic support system?

(e) the modalities for participation by non-NATO countries;

(f) the extent to which the NATO force would be financed collectively by the Member States through assessed contributions.

It would also be necessary to devise ways of ensuring that the United Nations would not be held responsible for actions by the NATO force over which, in reality, it had no effective control.

14. The third option would be for the Security Council to authorize interested Member States and regional organizations to form an ad hoc unified task force. This task force would undertake all the functions - military, police and civilian - allocated to "the United Nations" or "UNPROFOR" in the agreement, and perhaps those allocated to other international bodies as well. Certain Member States and/or regional organizations would take the lead in inviting others to contribute to the task force. The contributing countries would reach agreement amongst themselves on how it should be financed, including the solicitation of voluntary contributions from non-contributing States. This option would ensure unity of command and full coordination, under a single command, of the military, police and civilian functions. It would also facilitate an integrated logistic support system for the operation as a whole.

15. The United Nations would play no direct part in the conduct of such an operation, though UNHCR would continue to provide humanitarian relief and assist the return of refugees. Most of the questions in paragraph 13 above would be avoided. The Security Council might decide that the Secretary-General should establish a presence on the ground to monitor the way in which the task force carried out the activities authorized by the Council. But if that presence was required to exercise any degree of political supervision, the relationship between it and the head of the task force would have to be very carefully defined and agreed by the Security Council and by the members of the task force.

DIPLOMATIC OPTIONS IN THE BALKANS

The Bosnian Decision

On September 29 the Bosnian Parliament voted not to accept the most recent Owen-Stoltenberg plan unless the Bosnian Serbs return the territory they have conquered in eastern Bosnia. The apparent sweeping nature of this decision is likely to stop the Geneva negotiating process dead in its tracks. The Parliament was clearly expressing bitterness and frustration over the failure of the Geneva process to secure the return of a significant portion of their lost territories. The most recent flurry of diplomatic activity, which began with the breakdown of the talks in Geneva on September 1 and ended with the negotiations aboard HMS Invincible, may have been beside the point: The Bosnians clearly were unwilling to codify Serb conquests and ethnic cleansing; another 2-3 percent of territory would have made little difference.

Faced with a choice between an "unjust" peace and an uncertain, highly dangerous future, Izetbegovic and company opted for the latter. We do not know where the Bosnian government intends to go from here. They have indicated a willingness to return to the negotiating table, but appear to have used up all their flexibility. They may hope that the August 9 NATO warning will protect them from renewed Serb attack, while they patiently wait for sanctions to force the Serbs back to the table with more concessions in hand.

The situation on their Croatian flank is also unclear. Some Bosnian Government officials have expressed interest in prosecuting the war against the HVO in central Bosnia, where Government forces are doing well. Others, Silajdzic prominent among them, appear interested in pursuing a rapprochement with Zagreb, along the lines of the secret Izetbegovic-Tudjman agreement, as a bulwark against the Serbs. By all accounts, the Bosnian Government was satisfied with the deal offered by Zagreb on access to the sea. The only real certainty on this front is that, despite the secret agreement, fighting has continued in central Bosnia. This could serious jeopardize humanitarian aid deliveries as winter approaches.

Croatian and Serbian Attitudes

On the Croat side, Tudjman is probably disappointed by the apparent breakdown in the Geneva process. He has been having a difficult time getting the international community to focus on his big problem, which is Krajina. He may feel that he finally got our attention with his threat not to renew the UNPROFOR mandate in the UNPAs. Although no doubt relieved at our recent assurances that we will maintain substantial sanctions against Serbia pending a Krajina settlement, he may fear that Krajina will again recede into the background pending a Bosnia agreement. He could opt for the military option despite our warnings against it, or pursue rapprochement with the Muslims as his own bulwark against the Serbs.

The Serbs were very close to getting what they wanted in Bosnia and no doubt received the news from Sarajevo with dismay. Milosevic now faces the prospect of a winter under a harsh sanctions regime with no let-up in sight. If easing sanctions is uppermost in his mind, he could decide to use whatever influence he still possesses to get the Bosnian Serbs to give the Muslims a better deal. On the other hand, he could decide to play a riskier game and encourage them to resume the offensive, in the belief that NATO intervention can be avoided and the Muslims either totally defeated or forced back to the bargaining table on Serb terms.

Options for Next Steps

Given the current positions of the three parties, one of two things must happen to achieve a settlement in Bosnia. Either the Bosnian Government must get enough territory in eastern Bosnia to satisfy its needs or it must be convinced or forced to settle for considerably less. Since both the Muslims and Serbs seem to have gotten down to their bottom lines, it is hard to see how the Owen/Stoltenberg negotiating process can achieve either of these outcomes. Owen and Stoltenberg have no power to compel the Serbs to cede territory to the Muslims or to force the latter to settle for less. Something else needs to be added to the mix.

Short-Term Strategy

Given the uncertainty over how the other parties will react to the Bosnian Parliament's dramatic decision, it may be prudent to wait a few weeks to let the dust to settle before committing ourselves to any medium- or longer-term strategy. The parties may themselves take actions or make proposals during the next week or two which could help determine our longer-term strategy. It may take a few weeks -- and the onset of winter -- for the Bosnian Muslims to fully absorb the consequences of the parliament's decision and to arrive at a coherent position.

During this interim period, we should urge the parties to return to follow through on their Joint Declaration commitments, including the establishment of working groups to discuss territorial issues. We should also caution them to avoid actions that could undermine prospects for renewed negotiations; we should try to preempt a renewal of Serb-Muslim hostilities by reaffirming our commitment to the August 9 NATO air-strike decision; and we should begin serious planning for stepping up humanitarian relief efforts for the coming winter. Once we have had an opportunity to assess developments on the ground, there are a number of longer-term options we can consider.

Although we have probably gone as far as we can in imposing sanctions on Belgrade, it might be worthwhile to spell out for Milosevic what our plans are for easing sanctions against Serbia. The realization that sanctions will only begin to come off in return for a Bosnia settlement, and that the most biting sanctions will only be lifted in return for settlements or an easing of tensions in Krajina and Kosovo, might give him an incentive to move sooner rather than later on Bosnia.

Military Options

One possibility is the application of outside military force. Last spring, we put our allies and Moscow on notice that if the Geneva negotiations broke irretrievably down we would reserve the right to resurface the "lift and strike" option. This option attracted little support when first raised and is unlikely to prove any more popular now, either at home or abroad. Nor would it be certain to produce a positive outcome on the ground. A less sweeping military option would be to implement only the "lift" portion of the "lift and strike" option and remove the arms embargo against Bosnia. We have supported this option previously and could press again for a UNSC resolution lifting the embargo. Key allies as well as Moscow remain adamantly opposed, however, and are unlikely to change their minds except, perhaps, in the case of large-scale Serb aggression against Sarajevo and Muslim-held areas. Nor is it certain that lifting the embargo at this point would do anything more than prolong the conflict and add to the suffering.

Another option might be to promote a partial settlement among the parties -- e.g. implementing the accord to make Sarajevo a UN-administered province -- and enforce it with U.S. and NATO peacekeeping forces. This could ensure the survival of Sarajevo through the winter and beyond; it could also be a powerful deterrent against new Serb offensives and give the Bosnians greater confidence in seeking a wider political settlement. On the other hand, it would place U.S. and NATO forces in an exposed position, and perhaps elicit even greater Congressional resistance than has been the case for implementation of the Owen/Stoltenberg plan.

Buying Time for Sanctions

We know that sanctions are having a devastating impact on the Serbian economy. What we do not know is how long it might take for sanctions to force Serbian concessions on Bosnia, if ever. Nonetheless, one possible option would be to adopt a mid- to long-term strategy aimed at maintaining the status quo on the ground in Bosnia until the pain of the sanctions regime forces the Serbs to be more reasonable. This would, in fact, be a continuation of the short-term strategy we recommend pursuing over the next few weeks. Under this option, we would continue to support the Owen-Stoltenberg process and continue to urge the parties to negotiate in good faith.

Maintaining the Status Quo on the Ground: While working to keep the Owen-Stoltenberg process going, we would continue efforts to prevent renewed hostilities from breaking out and to mobilize the international community to carry out the humanitarian relief effort needed to get the Bosnian people through the coming winter. As noted above, this would involve getting our Allies to reaffirm NATO's August 9 air-strike decision (and perhaps to spell out more explicitly the categories of Serb and Croat behavior that could trigger air strikes). At the same time, we should caution the Bosnians that the humanitarian purpose of our air-strike threat has not changed, and that they should not expect outside military intervention to help them win the war.

We should recognize, however, that our ability to influence events on the ground is far from complete. One problem we may face is that, even if the Bosnian Serbs do not renew their stranglehold on Sarajevo, they could prosecute the war in areas arguably not covered by the August 9 decision. This could face us with a choice between drawing yet another line in the sand, an approach which could be difficult to sell to allies, or acquiescing in the loss of more Bosnian government territory.

Clearly, the possibility of renewed fighting is directly related to the humanitarian relief effort. If we are successful in averting a large-scale resumption in fighting, the humanitarian relief effort this winter will be much more manageable. Should we fail, we could face a humanitarian catastrophe.

Encouraging Croat-Muslim Rapprochement: While supporting continuation of the Geneva process and working to prevent intensified fighting on the ground, there are a number of other diplomatic initiatives we could pursue under this option. One could be to encourage the rapprochement between Zagreb and the Bosnian Muslims that began with the secret agreement between Tudjman and Izetbegovic in Geneva on September 14. While this could prove to be a dead-end, successful movement toward merger would put pressure on Belgrade, help to preserve a genuinely multi-ethnic entity in the heart of the Balkans, and strengthen the strategic position of both Zagreb and Sarajevo vis-a-vis the Serbs. The Muslims might even be persuaded to drop their pursuit of additional territory in eastern Bosnia in return for the strategic security and enhanced viability that confederation with Croatia would provide.

London Conference II

Another possible option would be to try to regenerate negotiating momentum by seeking to replace the Owen/Stoltenberg process with a new negotiating forum with a different mandate. The Bosnia negotiations launched by the London Conference and initially co-chaired by Vance and Owen under ICFY sponsorship sought to preserve a single Bosnian state within its current boundaries. However, all three parties are now prepared to accept the partition of the country under certain conditions. The secret Tudjman-Izetbegovic agreement foresees partition, as does the September 16 Serb-Muslim Joint Declaration. The sticking point, from the Bosnian government point of view, is the territorial issue.

A London Conference II, which would reflect the changes circumstances on the ground in Bosnia and whose mandate would be to implement a humane and orderly partition of Bosnia, while seeking territorial adjustments and perhaps some voluntary transfer of populations, could create a new dynamic and give renewed momentum to negotiations. The Serbs and Croats might be attracted to the idea since it would hold out the promise of early partition. The Bosnian government might be harder to convince, but we could try to persuade them that they stand a better chance of getting an acceptable deal on territory by agreeing to a rapid partition of the country. The Bosnian Serbs have recently hinted they might cede more territory in eastern Bosnia in the context of partition and merger with Serbia. Such negotiations could also be used to promote the idea of a Croat-Muslim merger.

Even if a London Conference II was not immediately successful, it could buy valuable time. By moving swiftly to energize a new negotiating process, we might be able to avert a return to the battlefield and help the Bosnian Muslims get through another winter. This, in turn, could give sanctions more time to work and perhaps make Belgrade more amenable to serious negotiations by next spring. Although a London Conference II could be convened under the auspices of the ICFY, we would have the option of using negotiations on a new mandate to change the sponsorship and chairmanship of the new forum. One possibility would be to propose having the new negotiations conducted under CSCE auspices, as a way of making a clear break with an Owen-Stoltenberg process that has been largely discredited.

Balkan Conference

Although a London Conference II could succeed in regenerating negotiating momentum, it would by definition focus exclusively on Bosnia. As we are becoming increasingly aware, however, Bosnia does not exist in a vacuum. A renewal of war in Krajina, for example, would threaten to spill back over into Bosnia regardless of any settlement there, with obvious implications for any NATO implementation force. Although not directly related to Bosnia, an explosion in Kosovo could have region-wide repercussions. Certainly, there will be no return of stability to the Balkans unless the crises in these other areas are resolved.

There are also time considerations. Tudjman is increasingly frustrated at the unwillingness of the international community to engage on Krajina. He may not be willing to wait for a new Bosnia negotiation to run its course. Milosevic, similarly, is likely to feel impatient once he realizes that we do not intend to lift the most biting sanctions until there is a settlement on Krajina, and perhaps on Kosovo as well. One possible way to deal with these frustrations would be to establish a single "Balkan Conference" negotiating forum in which all these issues could be addressed simultaneously.

Under such a scheme, negotiations on Bosnia, Krajina and Kosovo would be conducted separately but the synergy from each could influence the others and create new possibilities for trade-offs. It is possible, for example, that the Serbs might be more willing to concede territory in eastern Bosnia in return for concessions in Croatia. In addition, the prospect of a complete lifting of sanctions at the successful conclusion of a Balkan Conference might make Milosevic more willing to make concessions on territory and in other areas. This point could be made to the Bosnian Muslims, who might otherwise fear that their interests would be submerged in a more broadly-based forum. While addressing Bosnia, Krajina and Kosovo, a Balkan Conference could also be used to tackle such region-wide issues as arms control, the rights of ethnic minorities and economic reconstruction. The overall aim of the Conference would be to bring a comprehensive peace to the Balkans.

RE: Summary of Conclusions for Oct. 18 PC

My notes indicate the decision was to delay close air support and to follow up by informing capitals.

Jenonne says she has no recollection of such statements but my notes are pretty clear.

My recollection in between: delay CAS. Don't remember informing capitals beyond Madeleine.

or put under UNPROFOR control by 7:00 pm EST Sunday will be subject to attack. (S)

-- We welcome Russian help in gaining Bosnian Serb promise to comply with NATO's ultimatum, but need to see results on the ground. Not willing to re-negotiate NATO's deadline. (S)

-- Bill Perry and Shali's meeting with French, British, Dutch and Italian opposite numbers in Aviano Sunday will review contingency planning with participating allies but not reopen decisions. (S)

Diplomacy

-- Demarches will be made to the Serbs about the dangers of retaliation against UNPROFOR or civilians and to the Bosnian government about the damage to its international support if it fails to turn in its (few) heavy weapons or takes advantage of NATO's action to raise its negotiating demands or seize battlefield advantage in the Sarajevo region. (S)

-- Secretary Christopher will write NATO foreign ministers on the need for NATO firmness and unity and telephone those whose governments may need stiffening. (S)

-- Agreed to hold off on decision on Presidential calls to Kohl, Yeltsin, Major, Boutros-Ghali and Ciampi (if we expect to be using Italian bases for air strikes). (S)

-- Secretary Christopher and Ambassador Albright will clarify with Boutros-Ghali the consequences for U.S./UN relations if he withholds authority. (S)

-- Ambassador Albright will continue working for a statement by concerned Security Council members (U.S., UK, France, Russia and Spain) that can help Yeltsin without weakening NATO's ultimatum. (S)

-- To bring Russia constructively into the negotiations, Secretary Christopher may invite Kozyrev to Washington. Steve Oxman also may meet with his key West Europeans and Russian counterparts. (S)

-- State will prepare a letter from the President to Tudjman urging his cooperation in the negotiations. (S)

-- Secretary Christopher and Anthony Lake and possibly Vice President Gore will see Bosnian Prime Minister Silajdzic in Washington next week. We may invite Croatian Foreign Minister Granic at the same time if it seems that would be productive. (S)

RUSSIA STRATEGY

Our short-term strategy with the Russians over the coming week is to try to ameliorate their irritation at having been "cut out" of the decisionmaking on Bosnia, while simultaneously to set straight their persistent misunderstanding of the January 9 decision. Key elements of this strategy include:

-- The President's February 17 letter to Yeltsin (including a recognition of Russian efforts to pressure the Serbs, an explanation of the UN "icebreaker" role, and a pledge to try to inform Yeltsin in advance if airstrikes are imminent);

-- Continued consultations at the UN to see if there is any chance for a statement or letter that would meet Russian concerns;

-- The President's public statements on Bosnia before Monday, which should emphasize points of importance to Russia (compliance with the UN plan will obviate airstrikes; the "icebreaker" role) and highlight their role in persuading the Serbs to withdraw their heavy weaponry (if this agreement has been carried out);

-- The President's phone call to Yeltsin on Sunday, to review with him the state of play and inform him, if necessary, that air strikes are imminent.

Longer term, we will seek to keep the Russians involved in the process on several fronts. As regards the corralling of weapons within the exclusion zone, we will continue to rely on their influence to hold the Serbs to the agreements. With regard to the settlement negotiations, if it is decided that the United States might play a special role in working with the Muslims under any EU plan, then we might at the same time consider wrapping the Russians into an analogous role with the Serbs. We have been reluctant to involve the Russians in the past because of our doubts about the purity of their motives. If, however, they have in fact been successful in influencing Serbs in the right direction with regard to the exclusion zone, then there may no longer be a viable reason not to try to have them use their influence on the negotiating track as well.

Summary of Conclusions

Bosnian-Croat Negotiations

-- Secretary Christopher will prepare a status report for the President on the negotiations now underway in Washington, which Mr. Lake will take to the President in Pittsburgh the afternoon of February 28. (S)

NATO February 28 Enforcement of Bosnian No-Fly-Zone

-- In public, we will stress that the February 28 action was a NATO rather than U.S. operation, and that NATO acted in response to a clear violation without certainty as to the nationality of the aircraft. NATO was enforcing a UN Security Council resolution that applies equally to all the Bosnian parties. (S)

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY
DECLASSIFIED
PER E.O. 13526
2010-0533-F
RS 9/30/14 (1.15)

-- Secretary Perry and General Shalikashvilli will brief the Hill leadership and key committee chairmen the afternoon of February 28. (S)

-- The Pentagon will give a press background briefing the afternoon of February 28, amplifying public remarks already made by President Clinton. (S)

-- Ambassador Albright will suggest to UN Under Secretary Annan that he request a briefing through NATO military channels, on the basis of which he could then brief the Security Council. (S)

Possible Further Actions

-- The Deputies Committee will meet during the week of February 28 on possible steps to aid or accelerate the opening of Tuzla airport. The IWG paper of February 14 describing possibilities will be used as the basis for consideration of the latter point. (S)

-- The Principals Committee will meet on the latter point, and the former if necessary, Monday March 7. (S)

Congressional support for Bosnian policy

-- The Administration will explore with Representative Hamilton prospects for passage of his draft resolution without opening a full debate on Bosnia policy. Our basic position remains, as the President has said, that we welcome a resolution endorsing the Administration's plans. (S)

French Draft UNSC Resolution

-- We will continue supporting the French draft but not push for it. If useful to meet Russian concerns, we will agree to drop reference to Brcko. (S)

Summary of Conclusions

-- Principals agreed to recommend that the President decide to approve an increase in the U.S. contingent in UNPROFOR Macedonia to free up Nordic contributors for deployment elsewhere in UNPROFOR. (S)

  -- Consultations with Democratic leaders on the Hill generally have been favorable. Principals will consult informally on the Hill with Republican leadership. (S)

  -- State and DOD will take soundings from Nordic counterparts to determine their willingness to be displaced. (S)

  -- The U.S. will seek to command UNPROFOR Macedonia. (S)

  -- Other contributors would provide a significant non-U.S. presence in the total force deployed in Macedonia. (S)

-- Principals agreed that the U.S. should work with the UN to identify and facilitate potential sources of additional contributions to UNPROFOR. (S)

  -- We would approach the Eastern Europeans and encourage them to make more than a token contribution to UNPROFOR. (S)

  -- We would support the participation of the Italians. (S)

  -- We would not advocate, but would not oppose, the participation of the Turks. (S)

  -- We would support the participation of the Pakistanis. (S)

  -- DOD will work up a reimbursement scheme for airlift and logistics support that charges the UN our marginal costs of providing this support in order to make our offer more attractive to the UN. (S)

U.S. Support to Strengthen UNPROFOR

Recent developments in Bosnia have seriously strained UNPROFOR's ability to fulfill its many mandates and new responsibilities, including monitoring the Sarajevo exclusion zone and ceasefire in Central Bosnia. The requests for new troops range up to 10,650, but the immediate priority is to fill the UN's first request for an additional 3,000 troops to help police the Sarajevo exclusion zone. We assume for the purpose of this paper that the request for 3,000 additional troops is permissible under existing mandates, the request for 10,650 will undoubtedly require a new Security Council resolution. The British are reportedly about to offer an additional 900 new troops, if the other 2,100 can be found from other contributors. The additional troops should preferably be NATO or NATO standard troops in order to enhance UNPROFOR effectiveness.

The British are expected to ask us to provide airlift and possibly some equipment or logistical support for the new troops on a non-reimbursable or reduced rate basis. They are also pushing for us to send more troops to Macedonia to relieve the Nordic battalion, enabling them to move to Bosnia. The French have also demarched us on this request. This paper looks at these issues, as well as the broader issue of increasing UNPROFOR's strength.

Additional U.S. Troops for Macedonia

As of February 16, there were 1,024 troops in UNPROFOR FYROM, 307 of which were from the United States and the rest from the Nordic countries (Norway 236, Sweden 260, Finland 217 and Denmark 4). These numbers fluctuate constantly within a narrow range. The commander is a member of the Nordic Brigade, but the U.S. is in the process of informing the UN of our willingness to send a U.S. army officer to fill the Chief of Staff position at the UN's request.

An increased U.S. deployment to UNPROFOR FYROM could free part of the Nordic Battalion to move from Macedonia to Bosnia. The Nordic troops are among the better-trained and -equipped troops in UNPROFOR and could play an important role in Bosnia. Some of the Nordic troops in Macedonia may be volunteers, and we are not certain if they are available for deployment to the more hostile environment in Bosnia. Embassy Oslo has previously indicated that UN interest in redeploying elements of the Nordic force continues to cause political problems for the Government of Norway, and may require future parliamentary action. The Swedes have told the French that pariliamentary approval would be necessary to move their troops. Clearly, we cannot automatically assume that a larger deployment of US troops to FYROM will necessarily result in more Nordic troops being available for duty in Bosnia. We or the UN would have to raise this issue with the Nordic governments.

We should avoid any wholesale replacement of the Nordic troops in FYROM by U.S. troops. Doing so would make this a U.S. operation and involve a considerably greater political commitment. A limit of 600 to 700 troops would be about right. The Greeks could very well react irrationally to an increased U.S. deployment to FYROM, but their reaction would most likely be milder if we do not assume the whole operation.

Another approach might be to rotate the entire Nordic detachment, increase the U.S. contribution to 600 to 700 and backfill the additional Nordic troops with less highly trained troops. There are potential drawbacks to putting U.S. troops in a close working relationship with less capable troops, but the environment is not nearly as demanding as that in Bosnia. We might also have to provide a U.S. commander, which would raise the U.S. profile.

High-level Congressional consultations would be necessary before we deploy additional U.S. troops. We will also have to look closely at funding issues. Our contingent to Macedonia has been provided under the UN Participation Act (UNPA). In order to expand the contingent significantly under the UNPA we would need a UN request and another Secretary of State to Secretary of Defense letter to invoke the Act. There is also a 1000 person global limit under the UNPA to consider -- this expansion might exhaust most of the 1000 and thus not permit the use of UNPA to detail other contingents such as Haiti when circumstances warrant. (Use of section 628 of the FAA to detail armed forces personnel for UN peacekeeping purposes might provide another option, but would require further study.)

U.S. Airlift Support

We will also be pressed by the British and others to provide airlift support and possibly some logistic and equipment support for the additional troops. The UN generally considers U.S. rates for airlift assistance to be prohibitive, and there will likely be requests for the U.S. to provide this airlift for free or at a reduced rate. We have, in fact, been told informally that the UN would be unlikely to accept an offer for airlift on a reimbursable basis as U.S. costs are as much as three times as high as commercial rates. The airlift support could be provided on a reimbursable basis under the FAA section 607 agreement currently being negotiated.

Providing the airlift at no cost to the UN would require use of Presidential drawdown authority (probably under Section 506(a)(1) of the FAA). Providing airlift services to the UN at a reduced rate would also require the use of drawdown authority for part of the services to reduce the total cost. The use of Presidential drawdown authority to provide support to UNPROFOR without reimbursement could have serious ramifications for our efforts to secure funding for our arrears to the UN for peacekeeping assessments from Congress.

Participation of Italy and Turkey in UNPROFOR

According to press accounts, Italy offered to provide troops to UNPROFOR about two years ago, but has so far been rebuffed because Italy is a neighboring country to the former Yugoslavia and a former colonial power. We are not certain they will be willing to provide troops now. The UN Secretariat may now be willing to reconsider its opposition to Italian participation in UNPROFOR, but as of March 7, was still holding to its position opposing the inclusion of neighboring states. There might also be Secretariat resistance to adding troops from countries that are not already participating in UNPROFOR. Boutros Ghali opposed inclusion of the Italians in Somalia, once again because of the Colonial relationship. Italian participation would provide a significant increase in NATO troops in Bosnia, which would enhance UNPROFOR's ability to fulfill its missions. The major drawback to deploying Italian troops may be that it would make it more difficult to exclude Turkish troop contributions.

The advantages of bringing Italian forces into UNPROFOR are several. As a NATO member, Italy has limited forces which are well trained, well equipped and operationally integrated with other NATO forces already serving with UNPROFOR. Italians know ex-Yugoslavia and share a similar terrain and climate. Since the Italians are withdrawing about two battalions from Somalia in April, they would be in a position to send that many units and perhaps more to Bosnia. Time and cost should be relatively negligible, and disruption of other peacekeeping operations would be minimized. Finally, Italy has had recent experience of peace enforcement, in Somalia.

A more problematic alternative would be Turkey. Turkey has expressed a desire to send forces and could probably make available substantial numbers. Turkey shares many of Italy's advantages, including NATO membership and proximity. The UN, however, has barred Turkish participation in UNPROFOR because a Turkish presence would not be viewed as neutral. We have not opposed Turkish participation in UNPROFOR and may want to consider a non-combat role, such as logistics, for Turkish forces.

Any Turkish role in the Balkans would be opposed by the Greeks, so it may prove difficult to achieve necessary EU agreement to their participation. Greece might even find a Turkish presence sufficiently provocative to side more openly herself with Serbia. Turkish participation could undermine our efforts to contain the conflict. As the ancient enemy of Serbia, Turkey arouses such hatred and fear among the Serbs that they might oppose a political settlement which involves a Turkish presence. Russia's deployment might find a parrallel in deployment of Turks among the Bosnian muslims, although this would be a wide departure from the concept that peacekeeping troops should be neutral.

More Troops - Borrowing from current UN Missions

Deploying new units will require a significant amount of time and money. Our first priority should be to seek units that fit the profile of what UNPROFOR needs: NATO or NATO compatible troops mostly in battalion size units (or larger). In current UN missions, these are in relatively short supply, although some possibilities are listed below:

Belgium: 430 troops in Rwanda;

Finland: 519 troops in Lebanon;

France: 436 troops in Lebanon;

Italy: 2185 troops in Somalia (being w/d);
1004 troops in Mozambique;

Sweden: 490 troops in Lebanon.

Possible problems: (a) Three of the five above are in Lebanon, a sensitive mission where it is difficult for the parties to agree on replacements; (b) the numbers are relatively small; (c) rotating troops from other peacekeeping operations could be time consuming and disruptive to the other missions.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Tougher Political Approach to Europeans

We could adopt a tougher line with the Europeans, noting that we are now heavily engaged politically, as they wanted, and that in order for the peace process to succeed they should provide more troops.

A number of countries with relatively large, capable militaries have made small contributions, including:

Belgium, currently 990, could be asked to provide an additional battalion;

Spain, currently 1,189, could be asked to provide and additional one to two battalions;

UK, currently 2,142, will likely offer an additional 900 troops.

Italy, could be asked to provide at least two battalions. (NOTE: the UN has requested two engineer battalions and two logistical battalions, so the Italians need not assume a combat role.)

The Netherlands has just doubled its contribution, although they may be able to provide additional company size forces --see below. Denmark could also be approached for these smaller units.

Eastern Europe

We could also approach Eastern European countries interested in cooperating with the West (and that are not involved in the conflict), such as Poland and the Czech Republic, for at least one battalion each. This would not only be an additional source of personnel, but would help keep the UN comfortable that UNPROFOR is not becoming an all NATO show.

Pakistani Troops

The deployment of 3,000 Pakistani troops is now scheduled for mid-summer. They are planning to take refresher training in Austria on equipment being provided by Germany. It might be possible to push-up this deployment.

Russian Troops

Our efforts to recruit more troops from Western and Eastern Europe may lead to offers from the Russians of more troops. We may not always welcome these offers.

Bosnia Points

-- Today, while negotiations were being held on a cease-fire in Bosnia, the Serbs launched a new attack on Gorazde.

-- These attacks on Gorazde have resulted in heavy casualties and have put United Nations personnel at risk.

-- UNPROFOR commander in Bosnia, General Rose, requested and received authorization from UN civilian authorities to request NATO close air support.

-- Under existing authority and policy, NATO forces promptly responded. U.S. F-16 aircraft, under NATO command and control, attacked at least one target identified by UNPROFOR.

-- French aircraft under NATO are carrying out reconnaissance to assess damage.

-- We have said we would act if requested; we have done so, and will do so again, as asked.

-- The Serbs should cease their attacks on Gorazde and pull back.

-- The talks on cessation of hostilities in Bosnia should resume.

Q: What are you prepared to do if attacks continue, putting Gorazde in danger of falling?

A: We have confidence in General Rose's determination. We are prepared to continue to act as we did today.

Summary of Conclusions

1. Secretary Christopher will review what we earlier have said to Belgrade about not interfering with U.S./NATO aircraft (including those participating in humanitarian air drops). (S)

2. Ambassador Albright will ask about the UN's planning for the humanitarian effort. (S)

3. Sarajevo exclusion zone: In light of Gorazde events, it is more important than ever that the exclusion zone be enforced. To that end:

--By COB 4/18, CIA will circulate an assessment of the effectiveness of the Sarajevo exclusion zone, including the issue of the tank menacing UNPROFOR troops on 4/14. (S)

--Admiral Smith will inquire whether UNPROFOR is satisfied with the degree of its control over heavy weapons in the Sarajevo

exclusion zone in order to engage UNPROFOR in a discussion of how to ensure control. (S)

--Ambassador Albright will ask the UN Secretariat for a briefing on the status of the exclusion zone. (S)

--State will instruct USNATO to raise the issue. (S)

4. At the United Nations, Ambassador Albright will not oppose calls for positive action that come before the Security Council but will privately suggest to the French and others as appropriate that further calls that are unlikely to be implemented only further damage the organization's credibility. (S)

5. General Shalikashvili will review the possibility of augmenting U.S. forces in UNPROFOR Macedonia (beyond the increases being made this week) and our ability to assist them with greater power if necessary. (S)

6. We will support the proposed increase in UNPROFOR's ceiling. (S)

7. We will support easing restrictions on Turkish troops for UNPROFOR. (S)

8. OSD will prepare proposals for providing more U.S. equipment to UNPROFOR troops. (S)

9. The sanctions Working Group will prepare proposals on tightening sanctions by COB today for the President's review tomorrow. (S)

10. The IWG will elaborate two options for PC consideration: (1) a combination of options II and III of the paper prepared for today's Principals meeting; and (2) Option III alone. Both will be completed by COB 4/18. (S)

11. The attached points will be used for all press, Hill, and other public contacts today. In addition, Hill members and Staff will be asked what action they believe the Congress would support. (S)

PUBLIC LINE FOR TODAY

-- Gorazde situation grim and unpredictable.

-- Bosnian Serbs have violated their agreements with the UN and with Russia.

-- This is a setback to recent positive momentum achieved by success of NATO's Sarajevo ultimatum. (Bosnian-Croat agreements which are holding and have changed the balance of power on the ground; Tuzla airport opening; Krajina ceasefire).

-- National security team met today. Assessing how to regain the momentum toward a cessation of hostilities throughout Bosnia-Herzegovina and a negotiated settlement. As the President repeatedly has said, the conflict can only be resolved by agreement, not on the battlefield.

exclusion zone in order to engage UNPROFOR in a discussion of how to ensure control. (S)

--Ambassador Albright will ask the UN Secretariat for a briefing on the status of the exclusion zone. (S)

--State will instruct USNATO to raise the issue. (S)

4. At the United Nations, Ambassador Albright will not oppose calls for positive action that come before the Security Council but will privately suggest to the French and others as appropriate that further calls that are unlikely to be implemented only further damage the organization's credibility. (S)

5. General Shalikashvili will review the possibility of augmenting U.S. forces in UNPROFOR Macedonia (beyond the increases being made this week) and our ability to assist them with greater power if necessary. (S)

6. We will support the proposed increase in UNPROFOR's ceiling. (S)

7. We will support easing restrictions on Turkish troops for UNPROFOR. (S)

8. OSD will prepare proposals for providing more U.S. equipment to UNPROFOR troops. (S)

9. (h) The sanctions Working Group will prepare proposals on tightening sanctions by COB today for the President's review tomorrow. (S)

10. The IWG will elaborate two options for PC consideration: (1) a combination of options II and III of the paper prepared for today's Principals meeting; and (2) Option III alone. Both will be completed by COB 4/18. (S)

11. The attached points will be used for all press, Hill, and other public contacts today. In addition, Hill members and Staff will be asked what action they believe the Congress would support. (S)

MEMORANDUM FOR ANTHONY LAKE

THROUGH: JENONNE WALKER

FROM: JANE E. HOLL

SUBJECT: Principals Meeting on Bosnia, April 18, 1994

The package for the Principals meeting on Bosnia is attached at Tab I. Tab B contains the issues paper for discussion and has been reviewed by State, OSD and JCS.

OSD and JCS believe strongly that Principals should review whether ratchetting up the military pressure to force Serb compliance with UN resolutions is a sound strategy to pursue at this juncture. To give you a flavor of their concerns, I have attached the informal JCS scrub of the issues paper at Tab II. Additionally, the draft agenda opens the discussion to alternative strategies Principals might wish to suggest.

RECOMMENDATION

That you authorize Will Itoh to sign the memorandum to agencies at Tab I.

INFORMATION PAPER

Subject: Comments on Draft NSC Issues Paper on Bosnia 17 APR (U)

1. (U) Purpose. To provide comments on draft NSC issues paper on Bosnia.

2. (S) Discussion. General comments:

•All options are escalatory in nature using brinksmanship to make the Bosnian-Serbs back down (which they've just demonstrated they're not liable to do). Air power options can not guarantee military impact sufficient to compel compliance.

•All options put UNPROFOR at increased risk.

•All options could result in Bosnian government manipulation of NATO responses.

•Failure of chosen option could result in total failure and withdrawal of UNPROFOR with subsequent impact on humanitarian aid.

•All 5 options are escalatory in nature and could lead to spillover.

•All proposed options assume NAC consensus (which would be extremely difficult to obtain in all cases, and impossible in the more aggressive options) and UN cooperation in execution (such UN resolve after last week's action is questionable).

OPTION 1: NATO Air Strikes on heavy weapons and infantry

PROs:

-Demonstrates forceful action.
-Consistent with NATO decisions of 2/9 Aug 93 declaring concern for B-H safe areas (NAC decision still required to execute air strikes).

CONs:

-Successful only if bombs don't drop.
-Most escalatory of all options.
-Taking on both attacks on heavy weapons and small infantry units places high requirement for air capability and increases danger to NATO pilots.
-Ignores likely Bosnian-Serb reactions.
-Relies on airpower alone to force B-S concessions on ground.
-Ultimately would weaken NATO; debate would be fractious, and if passed, would promise more than air power can deliver.
-Likely to further antagonize Russians.

OPTION 2: UNPROFOR exclusion areas around safe areas

PROs:

-Follows successful Sarajevo model.
-Builds on Feb 94 NAC decisions.
-Demonstrates evenhandedness in that it also warns Bosnian Muslims against attacking from safe areas (wording should be changed to reflect not launching assaults from inside safe areas vice refraining from use of heavy weapons from inside safe areas - applies to options 2,3,4).

CONs:

-Would require 8-10,000 additional UNPROFOR troops to enforce.
-Monitoring effort would scatter UNPROFOR forces leaving them vulnerable to harassment/detention, etc.
-Additional cost to USG for troops and additional flight hours.

OPTION 3: Exclusion areas without UNPROFOR control

PROs:

-Requires less troops.
-UNPROFOR less vulnerable and less visibly identified with enforcement.

CONs:

-Makes NATO appear a belligerent.
-Contrary to existing UNSCRs.
-Without ground observers, targeting and execution difficult.
-Requires extensive recon.

OPTION 4: No-bombardment zone

PROs:

-Consistent with UNSCRs supporting safe areas.
-If passed sends strong message of NATO solidarity.
-Probably most saleable to NAC.
-Doesn't attempt to roll back B-S.
-Could be used as basis for country-wide cease fire.

CONs:

-Subject to manipulation given lack of ground presence.
-Extremely difficult to enforce.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

OPTION 5: Complete withdrawal from around safe areas

PROs:

-Evenhanded approach, demanding compliance from both sides.
-Provides comprehensive safety for safe areas.

CONs:

-Manpower intensive to monitor on ground.
-Probably unacceptable to B-S.
-Probably unacceptable to Bosnian Government in that lines of conflict would be frozen.

NSC ALTERNATIVE STRATEGY

General comments noted above also applicable to alternative strategy.

PROs:

-Recognizes geographic isolation of Gorazde and lack of long-term viability in comprehensive agreement.

CONs:

-Doesn't specify how other safe areas are going to be protected by NATO.
-Admits UNPROFOR failure in Gorazde.

Minutes

Admiral Kraemer of DIA described continuing Bosnian Serb attacks on Gorazde despite NATO's ceasefire ultimatum. Mr. Stephanopoulos noted CNN reports of preliminary indications of a Bosnian Serb pullback, which Mr. Lake said UNPROFOR General Rose believes to be the case. The President asked why, if the Bosnian Serbs intended to comply, they had not already done so and Mr. Lake described evidence of serious command and control problems they are experiencing.

General Shalikashvili reviewed NATO actions to date: (1) CINCSOUTH Admiral Smith at 0630 EDT April 23 had asked UNPROFOR agreement to NATO air strikes in response to clear violations of the ceasefire ultimatum but was told by UNPROFOR Deputy Commander McGinnis that both Akashi and de Lapresle were away and the Deputy Commander did not have authority to agree; (2) at 0830 Admiral Smith faxed a written request to UNPROFOR and received no answer; (3) SACEUR General Joulwan sent Admiral Smith to Zagreb for a face to face meeting with UNPROFOR officials at which General de Lepresle said that the threat of NATO air strikes was working and Akashi should be given time to get the Bosnian Serbs both to cease shelling Gorazde and to withdraw forces as demanded by NATO. Admiral Smith was now meeting with Akashi to determine the latter's intentions and especially to press for a clear understanding of the conditions for NATO air strikes.

Ambassador Albright reviewed NATO Secretary General Woerner's efforts to persuade Akashi to agree to air strikes and Akashi's plea to Woerner that the Bosnian Serbs should be given more time. She also noted the UN's view that an UNPROFOR presence in Gorazde would permit verification of what is happening and that Akashi had told Kofi Annan that the presence of UNPROFOR should not impede air strikes. Mr. Lake added that Karadzic is claiming that NATO's conditions will be met when UNPROFOR is in Gorazde. He further noted the French refusal to join an UNPROFOR detachment for Gorazde.

The President asked if Akashi in effect had authorized Gorazde to be shelled today. Mr. Lake said our view was that there should have been NATO air strikes today and that should be made public.

Mr. Lake said there was no important operational decision to be taken as to what will happen in the next few hours. The important thing is what we say to UNSYG Boutros Ghali about what should happen after midnight Sunday GMT. His recommendation, accepted by the Group, was to distinguish at that time between continued shelling and compliance with NATO's demand for force withdrawals. If shelling continues, there should be NATO airstrikes. But if the ceasefire is holding and there is evidence that the Bosnian Serbs are withdrawing as demanded by NATO, then we would be in a poor position to push for air strikes. This is so both because the best outcome on the ground would be one similar to Sarajevo--compliance without airstrikes, even if the deadline slips somewhat--and because since there is evidence that Mladic and local Bosnian Serb commanders are calling for a ceasefire and pullback, if NATO conducts airstrikes and if Bosnian Serbs then take UNPROFOR lives, there would be serious problems with London, Paris, and other UNPROFOR governments.

In response to a question from Secretary Christopher, General Shalikashvili said that night operations are possible. In response to a question from the President, the General replied that there would be a little less danger to NATO pilots from some air defense guns but the risk from heat seeking missiles would be about the same as during daytime operations.

Mr. Gergen, who joined the meeting late, noted that he had come from CNN where the public disagreement between NATO and the UN was "going down very badly". But, he continued, there was no pressure to do anything now. People seemed to understand that we should wait until tomorrow morning in Bosnia and, if by then the firing had subsided and a pullback was underway, there would not be strong media pressure for airstrikes.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

The President then concluded that we need some time to see what happens on the ground, but also a credible explanation for the the UN-NATO conflict. That explanation should be as honest as possible without unduly complicating the ability of the two organizations to work together.

Mr. Lake suggested making clear that CINCSOUTH, the USG, and NATO Secretary General Woerner all believed that the Bosnian Serbs were in violation of NATO's ultimatum and that there should be airstrikes; NATO's commander and the UN met during the course of the day; but because they saw evidence that the threat of NATO airstrikes was having the desired effect, UN officials recommended delaying airstrikes. Mr. Berger suggested we make any such statement prospective, emphasizing that NATO's threat still obtains, with which the President agreed.

Secretary Christopher concurred with the decision, but said someone should telephone UNSYG Boutros-Ghali to point out how he has damaged the UN. UN officials had been claiming that procedures for authorizing airstrikes had been streamlined, but had really screwed up.

The President speculated that Rose, de Lapresle and Akashi wanted to avoid airstrikes if at all possible in order to minimize the risk to UN personnel in Bosnia. The question, he continued, is how to avoid the absence of strikes today looking like a major defeat for NATO and the US.

Mr. Lake said that the next four hours do not matter very much; the next 12 hours matters a lot and in the next 12 days most of all.

The Vice President asked if the NATO-UN decision-making procedures have changed. Mr. Lake replied that the "ice breaker" issue has not been resolved. Our position is that it has been broken, but it may not matter because UNPROFOR seems to be consulting Akashi. General Shalikashvili said that the NAC's April 22 decision did not change procedures and UNPROFOR still can keep NATO from conducting air strikes or limit the scope of airstrikes if they do occur. The Vice President termed that "untenable".

Secretary Perry said we need to prepare now so if firing resumes in Gorazde tomorrow we can go in big. Mr. Lake agreed, asking Ambassador Albright to ensure that Boutros Ghali makes clear to all in the UN chain of command that if Gorazde is shelled on Sunday "we whack them". The President asked how best to convey that message: Boutros-Ghali to Akashi? Ambassador Albright said that Boutros-Ghali believed he already had done so.

The President said that it may not be the worst thing in the world not to have conducted airstrikes today, since three of the nations with people on the ground are NATO members, if we can get agreement now to go all out tomorrow if necessary. We must not spend six hours tomorrow repeating today's exercise. Secretary Christopher said he would call Boutros-Ghali. General

Shalikashvili will ask Admiral Smith to verify that Boutros-Ghali has passed the message to Akashi.

The President said the group should reconvene at 5:00 today, just before the NATO deadline expires. We dodged a bullet today, he noted, but we cannot permit the same thing to happen tomorrow.

Secretary Christopher suggested we say there was some confusion today; Secretary Perry that the policy is working because we are getting compliance. The Vice President and Mr. Lake suggested it had not worked well for those who died from continued Serb shelling today. Mr. Lake said we should just lay out the facts without characterizing them, including by saying there had been confusion.

Mr. Gergen said we would need to background the press today, especially on the UN veto of NATO airstrikes. The President said the UN had not vetoed; it honestly believed the policy was being complied with and wanted a delay when NATO wanted immediate action, but did not veto the basic decision. Dumping on someone on background, the President continued, hurts us tomorrow; it only makes us look weak. So we should stick to facts: we were ready to go this morning, the UN thought NATO's ultimatum was working and made a decision not to undermine the policy but to delay it. If we get into a pissing match with the UN it will make us look weak. We believed there was a violation and the UN did not disagree.

The Vice President asked what criteria would trigger NATO strikes. Mr. Lake said (1) clear violation of the ceasefire must be responded to and that means any shelling by heavy weapons rather than small arms fire; (2) absence of clear sign that the Bosnian Serbs are doing all they can to comply with the withdrawal demand and UNPROFOR troops are permitted into Gorazde area to see it.

General Shalikashvili said that if NATO strikes, its targets must not be limited to offending guns but should include groups of targets. Mr. Lake agreed, saying the targeting should be pursuant to NATO's decision. General Shalikashvili said we have identified 110 Bosnian Serb heavy weapons around Gorazde, and within a day or so would like to hit all of them.

The President asked what he should say to the press when walking back to Blair House. The Vice President recommended that he avoid comment. Mr. Lake said he would background the press.

The President closed the meeting by asking the group to reconvene at 5:00.

The President then concluded that we need some time to see what happens on the ground, but also a credible explanation for ~~the media of~~ the UN-NATO conflict. That explanation should be as honest as possible without unduly complicating the ability of the two organizations to work together.

Mr. Lake suggested making clear that CINCSOUTH, the USG, and NATO Secretary General Woerner all believed that the Bosnian Serbs were in violation of NATO's ultimatum and that there should be airstrikes; NATO's commander and the UN met during the course of the day; but because they saw evidence that the threat of NATO airstrikes was having the desired effect, UN officials recommended delaying airstrikes. Mr. Berger suggested we make any such statement prospective, emphasizing that NATO's threat still obtains, ~~to~~ with which the President ~~replied "damn right"~~ agreed.

Secretary Christopher concurred with the decision, but said someone should telephone UNSYG Boutros-Ghali to point out how he has damaged the UN. UN officials had been claiming that procedures for authorizing airstrikes had been streamlined, but had really screwed up.

The President speculated that Rose, de Lapresle and Akashi wanted to avoid airstrikes if at all possible in order to minimize the risk to UN personnel in Bosnia. The question, he continued, is how to avoid the absence of strikes today looking like a major defeat for the US. NATO and

Mr. Lake said that the next four hours do not matter very much; the next 12 hours matters a lot and in the next 12 days most of all.

The Vice President asked if the NATO-UN decision-making procedures have changed. Mr. Lake replied that the "ice breaker" issue has not been resolved. Our position is that it has been broken, but it may not matter because UNPROFOR seems to be consulting Akashi. General Shalikashvili said that the NAC's April 22 decision did not change procedures and UNPROFOR still can keep NATO from conducting air strikes or limit the scope of airstrikes if they do occur. The Vice President termed that "untenable".

Secretary Perry said we need to prepare now so if firing resumes in Gorazde tomorrow we can go in big. Mr. Lake agreed, asking Ambassador Albright to ensure that Boutros Ghali makes clear to all in the UN chain of command that if Gorazde is shelled on Sunday "we whack them". The President asked how best to convey that message: Boutros-Ghali to Akashi? Ambassador Albright said that Boutros-Ghali believed he already had done so.

The President said that it may not be the worst thing in the world not to have conducted airstrikes today, since three of the nations with people on the ground are NATO members, if we can get agreement now to go all out tomorrow if necessary. We must not spend six hours tomorrow repeating today's exercise. ~~He asked who should call Boutros-Ghali, and~~ Secretary Christopher said he would call Boutros Ghali. ~~be glad to do so~~. General Shalikashvili will ask Admiral Smith to verify that Boutros-Ghali has passed the message to Akashi.

The President said the group should reconvene at 5:00 today, just before the NATO deadline expires. We dodged a bullet today, he noted, but ~~will look like keystone cops if~~ the same thing happens tomorrow. we cannot permit to be

Secretary Christopher suggested we say there was some confusion today; Secretary Perry that the policy is working because we are getting compliance. The Vice President and Mr. Lake suggested it had not worked well for those who died from continued Serb shelling today. Mr. Lake said we should just lay out the facts without characterizing them, including by saying there had been confusion.

Mr. Gergen said we would need to background the press today, especially on the UN veto of NATO airstrikes. The President said the UN had not vetoed; it honestly believed the policy was being complied with and wanted a delay when NATO wanted immediate action, but did not veto the basic decision. Dumping on someone on background, the President continued, hurts us tomorrow; it only makes us look weak. So we should stick to facts: we were ready to go this morning, the UN thought NATO's ultimatum was working and made a decision not to undermine the policy but to delay it. If we get into a pissing match with the UN it will make us look weak. We believed there was a violation and the UN did not disagree.

The Vice President asked what criteria would trigger NATO strikes. Mr. Lake said (1) clear violation of the ceasefire must be responded to and that means any shelling by heavy weapons rather than small arms fire; (2) absence of clear sign that the Bosnian Serbs are doing all they can to comply with the withdrawal demand and UNPROFOR troops are permitted into Gorazde area to see it.

General Shalikashvili said that if NATO strikes, its targets must not be limited to offending guns but should include groups of targets. Mr. Lake agreed, saying the targeting should be pursuant to NATO's decision. General Shalikashvili said we have identified 110 Bosnian Serb heavy weapons around Gorazde, and within a day or so would like to hit all of them.

The President asked what he should say to the press when walking back to Blair House. The Vice President recommended that he avoid comment. Mr. Lake said he would background the press.

The President closed the meeting by asking the group to reconvene at 5:00.

Military Status Report for Sarajevo, Gorazde, and Tuzla

Both Bosnian Serb and Government forces have continued to violate the cease-fire agreement and heavy weapon exclusion zone around Sarajevo. Indeed, the Bosnian Serbs appear to be systematically challenging the UN's control over the zone. Bosnian Serb forces also have not fully implemented their withdrawal agreement with the UN around Gorazde. The Bosnian Serbs shelled Tuzla city and the surrounding area on 11 May for the fifth time since NATO conducted airstrikes on Serb forces attacking Gorazde last month. 3.5c

Recent Sarajevo Exclusion Zone Violations

Bosnian Serbs are increasingly flaunting UN control of the 20-kilometer exclusion zone around Sarajevo. Serb forces continue to operate heavy weapons outside of UN control or supervision within the Sarajevo exclusion zone. Serb forces also are reportedly blocking UN patrols in some areas of the exclusion zone and have a generally hostile attitude toward UN personnel.

-- The Bosnian Serbs violated most of the stipulations in the tank transit deal worked out by UN special envoy Akashi and Bosnian Serb leader Karadzic on 3 May. 1.4c

-- The Serbs have removed and not returned about 20 heavy weapons from UN weapon collection points since the NATO airstrikes around Gorazde in April.

-- 1.4c

-- Small arms and machine gun exchanges occur regularly throughout Sarajevo, and the UN stated the first tank round since the February cease-fire and ultimatum was fired on 9 May.

-- The Bosnian Serbs are limiting freedom of movement for UN personnel within the exclusion zone. For example, the Grbavica bridge is again closed to UN personnel, 1.4c 3.5c Bosnian Government forces have also violated the Sarajevo heavy weapon exclusion zone and cease-fire agreements, although not as blatantly as the Bosnian Serbs.

-- 1.4c six or seven heavy weapons and preparations for four or five new heavy weapon positions on Mount Igman, reports of 1,000 Government troops massing in the area. Some Government units are usually stationed in this area, but these forces probably have been reinforced with some additional troops and the heavy weapons. 3.5c

Bosnian Serb Compliance with Gorazde Ultimatum

The UN has become increasingly concerned about Bosnian Serb violations of the Gorazde exclusion zones. UN Special Representative Akashi told Bosnian Serb leader Karadzic on 10 May that unless the Bosnian Serbs immediately complied with the cease-fire agreement, he would have to refer the matter to the UN Secretary-General and the Security Council, 1.4c A series of Serb violations have been noted in recent days:

-- About 100 to 150 armed Bosnian Serb "police" remain stationed inside the three-kilometer exclusion zone, according to UN officials. Akashi has demanded these personnel be removed, 1.4c

-- The UN commander in Gorazde recently stated publicly that he is certain there are still heavy weapons being held within the zone. UN military observers recently found two 20mm AA weapons, which they escorted out of the zone, 1.4c The UN commander also stated that the Serbs probably are hiding weapons in areas they have declared off limits to UN observers.

3.5c

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCO

-- The Bosnian Serbs continue to harass and delay UN military and relief convoys entering Gorazde. A French logistics convoy held up at a Serb checkpoint for three days finally arrived in Gorazde on 9 May, 1.4c Some personnel reportedly were not allowed through and forced to return to Sarajevo. 3.5c

Bosnian Serb Actions Against Tuzla

Bosnian Serb forces shelled Tuzla city and the surrounding area on 11 May, 1.4c This is the fifth artillery attack on Tuzla city or Tuzla airport since the NATO airstrikes.

-- The latest shelling of the city may be a Serb response to the Government mortar attack against Brcko on 10 May that killed several civilians. 3.5c

Bosnia Points

-- Today, while negotiations were being held on a cease-fire in Bosnia, the Serbs launched a new attack on Gorazde.

-- These attacks on Gorazde have resulted in heavy casualties and have put United Nations personnel at risk.

-- UNPROFOR commander in Bosnia, General Rose, requested and received authorization from UN civilian authorities to request NATO close air support.

-- Under existing authority and policy, NATO forces immediately responded. U.S. F-16 aircraft, under NATO command and control, attacked at least one target identified by UNPROFOR.

-- French aircraft as part of the NATO operation are carrying out reconnaissance to assess damage.

-- We have said we would act if requested; we have done so, and will do so again, as asked.

-- The Serbs should cease their attacks on Gorazde and pull back.

-- The talks on cessation of hostilities in Bosnia should resume.

Q: What are you prepared to do if attacks continue, putting Gorazde in danger of falling?

A: We have confidence in General Rose's determination. We are prepared to continue to act as we did today.

Summary of Conclusions

1. We will push for Bosnian Serb compliance with the Gorazde exclusion zone and, if necessary, point to their failure to comply to explain lack of progress on a country-wide cessation of hostilities. (S)

2. To that end, Ambassador Albright will explore the possibility of a Security Council Presidency statement urging compliance with the Gorazde zone. If the GOBH is holding Serb hostages in the Gorazde area, the Presidency statement could call for their release. (S)

3. We will not press the GOBH to drop its insistence on compliance with the Gorazde zone as a condition for a country-wide cessation of hostilities. (S)

4. We will strongly urge the GOBH to accept the Contact Group's proposals for a 51-49% territorial division. (S)

5. To encourage the GOBH, we will reiterate our commitment to helping implement a viable settlement as strongly as possible while still noting the need for Congressional support. (S)

6. We also will tell other Contact Group members that if the GOBH accepts the Group's proposal and the Bosnian Serbs reject it, we will expect their support for further tightening sanctions on Serbia. (S)

7. Leon Fuerth will prepare an analysis of the New York Times 5/29 allegation that sanctions are having no serious effect on Serbia. (S)

MEMORANDUM FOR ANTHONY LAKE

FROM: JENONNE WALKER

SUBJECT: Options Paper on Bosnia

Attached is the options memo, in pro/con format as you requested at yesterday's PC. Peter Tarnoff, Wes Clark, Walt Slocombe and Chuck Redman all recommend strongly against the pro/con format. (As you know, so do I.) State and DOD already are drafting prose arguments for the options they think their Principals prefer. I have drafted for distribution for Principals only your cover note.

RECOMMENDATION

That you sign the memo to agencies at Tab I.

SUBJECT: Options Paper on Bosnia ~~(S)~~

Attached for is the IWG-cleared options paper on Bosnia that we requested at yesterday's Principals Committee meeting. ~~(S)~~

I hope this paper will help focus our thinking about the available options. I propose that in a Memorandum to the President we include only the options that one or more Principals support. I know that some of you would like to make the case for your preferred option in your own prose. If so, please circulate your proposals -- as brief as possible -- to all of us by noon, Thursday, June 16. We would do the minimum editing necessary to eliminate overlap and circulate a composite draft by COB that day. This schedule would enable us to get a memorandum to the President before the weekend. ~~(S)~~

OPTIONS PAPER: GIVING THE PARTIES INCENTIVES TO SETTLE

The Problem

A Bosnia settlement along the lines being developed in the Contact Group still appears out of reach because the parties do not have sufficient incentive to settle. The Bosnian government has expressed some willingness to accept a 51/49 solution, but is not likely to do so unless we can assure them that we are prepared to take decisive action to compel the Bosnian Serbs to go along. They will also want firmer assurances regarding U.S. participation in an implementation force. The Bosnian Serbs, on the other hand, have given no indication they would be prepared to accept a 51/49 settlement under current circumstances. Faced with a situation that could continue indefinitely, we should consider the possibility of raising the stakes in the hope of forcing a final settlement.

The Concept: Giving Each Party Incentives

One way to do this would be to take advantage of the stated willingness of the government to accept a 51/49 solution if the international community can provide assurances that the Serbs will be compelled to go along. We could seek EU and Russian agreement to take strong measures against the Bosnian Serbs in case the government agrees to a 51/49 Contact Group proposal and the Serbs do not. We could then make this agreement known to the government, in the hope of getting them to accept the proposal.

The Russians, however, and some of our European allies as well, are likely to balk at the idea of providing incentives only to the government and directing threats only at the Serbs. In order to get the Russians to agree to threaten stern measures against the Bosnian Serbs, therefore, we would almost certainly need to agree to reward the Serbs should they prove willing to settle for 51/49, particularly in a scenario in which the government says no. Although we would risk appearing to pressure the Bosnian government, this is by far the least likely of the two scenarios.

The Churkin Proposal

The above concept is very similar to a proposal already floated by the Russians. Following up on remarks made by Kozyrev at the May 13 Geneva Ministerial, Churkin has suggested to Ambassador Redman that, if the Bosnian government agrees to a 51/49 percent Contact Group proposal and the Bosnian Serbs do not, the arms embargo should be lifted. Conversely, if the Bosnian Serbs agree to the proposal and the government does not, and if the Serbs further unilaterally withdraw to the agreed territorial limits, sanctions would be lifted. If the

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

PER E.O. 13526
NL 2/6/2020 (S.22)
2013-0682-M

Russians are really serious about their proposal (and there is reason for doubt on this score), it might be possible to get them to agree to use some combination of incentives and threats as leverage against the parties.

Should we decide to pursue such an initiative, we need to consider what specific combination of incentives and threats we would use under each scenario. We could then decide to float the proposal with key allies before discussing it with the Russians. If agreement is reached with the EU and Russia to undertake such an initiative, the Contact Group could approach each of the parties with the specific proposal. We will need to consider what constitutes an appropriate response from the parties (i.e. are we asking for acceptance on a take-it-or-leave-it basis, or just as a framework for a settlement). Presumably, we would want them to sign an appropriate document recording their agreement to the proposal. We would also need to consider the relative advantages of informing each party what we are offering to the other.

SCENARIO 1: BOSNIAN SERBS ACCEPT, BOSNIAN GOVERNMENT REFUSES

Although this is by far the least likely scenario, in order to bring the Russians along, we would need to make sure that the carrots offered to the Bosnian Serbs are credible. Since sanctions are the key leverage we have against the Serbs, any credible incentive would have to involve some sanctions relief. A key question is whether we offer sanctions relief on signature of an agreement, or insist on partial or total withdrawal of Serbian forces to the specified territories before initiating sanctions relief. The three numbered options below consider these alternatives; we could choose a single option, or pursue two or three of them in sequential fashion.

Option 1: Sanctions Relief on Signature

The most attractive incentive for the Bosnian Serbs would be to offer them sanctions relief for simply agreeing to a Contact Group 51/49 proposal and signing an appropriate instrument confirming that agreement. This would be a significant departure from our stance to date, whereby sanctions relief would depend on Serb actions to implement the terms of a settlement. But it would reflect the reality that there are few other carrots available. The incentives could be made more or less appealing depending on the amount of relief offered.

A minimalist approach would be to suspend some of the more symbolic sanctions (culture/sports bans, civil air links) and/or implement a more liberal humanitarian exceptions policy in the UN Sanctions Committee, with further steps tied to concrete actions, such as unilateral withdrawal of forces in accordance with the Contact Group map. Alternatively, we could go further -- e.g. to suspend trade and transhipment sanctions on non-strategic goods upon acceptance of the Contact Group map -- with the offer of further relief to follow in return for withdrawals toward the territories allotted them in the proposal. The latter approach would involve actions that would be less reversible, as well as harder to defend domestically.

Option 2: Sanctions Relief for Partial Withdrawal

Under this option, the Serbs would be given initial sanctions relief in return for a partial withdrawal to the territories allotted them in the Contact Group proposal. We could, for example, identify key areas from which we would ask them to withdraw, at which time sanctions relief could begin. Once again, we could agree to provide them with some measure of relief in return for the initial withdrawals, holding the rest in reserve for future withdrawals, or for full withdrawal. Although a less attractive option for the Serbs, this would still give them a greater incentive than requiring full withdrawal at the outset.

Option 3: Sanctions Relief for Full Withdrawal

Under this option, we would provide them with sanctions relief only in return for full withdrawal to the territories given them in the Contact Group map. To make the offer more attractive, we could agree to insert UNPROFOR forces along the new borders to deter government attacks. In return for such withdrawal, we could agree to suspend the full array of UN sanctions envisaged in the EU's front-loaded plan. Suspending rather than lifting sanctions would mean our actions would be reversible, although it would be very difficult in practice to reestablish the enforcement regime. Nevertheless, this would give us at least some leverage in case of backsliding.

The one prominent exception to this is the freeze on assets, whose suspension could not be easily reversed, since the Serbs could take immediate concrete steps to move and hide their assets. We could therefore agree to hold the freeze in place until a Krajina settlement is being implemented, thus giving the Serbs some incentive to settle there and helping to reassure Zagreb (which believes we are firmly committed to maintaining a link between sanctions relief and the Krajina). This would be the one major point of departure from the original EU plan, and might prove acceptable to both the Europeans and the Russians.

While options 1 and 2 would provide the Bosnian Serbs with greater incentive to agree, option 3 would ensure greater Serb compliance, and may be consistent with the proposal floated by Churkin in any event.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Punitive and Other Options

Although the above options focus on providing the Serbs with sanctions relief if they agree to the Contact Group map and the Bosnian government does not, we could also consider taking punitive measures against the government to encourage its agreement. We could disavow our support for lifting the arms embargo, suspend implementation of NATO's air-strike decisions, or threaten to pull out of the humanitarian relief effort. We could modify the Contact Group proposal to reduce the quality of territory designated for the Bosnian government (e.g. grant the Serbs a 4-kilometer wide northern corridor). Punitive measures against the government would be hard to sustain domestically, however, particularly if they seemed likely to cause humanitarian suffering or further battlefield reverses.

Another possibility would be to offer, or to encourage the Russians and others to offer, the Serbs economic and other positive incentives that go beyond sanctions relief. Any such encouragement, however, would be inconsistent with the current U.S./EU position that Serbia should not receive reconstruction or other economic assistance until the disputes over Krajina and Kosovo have been satisfactorily resolved.

SCENARIO 2: BOSNIAN GOVERNMENT AGREES, BOSNIAN SERBS REFUSE

Just as sanctions relief is the key carrot we could offer the Bosnian Serbs, a willingness to act militarily against the Serbs is probably the only credible carrot we have that might induce the government to accept a 51/49 Contact Group proposal. The Europeans and the Russians, to the extent they can support any military action against the Serbs, would want to ensure that it maximizes pressure on Pale but avoids encouraging an escalation of Bosnian government war and negotiating aims. The Europeans are also likely to insist on pulling out of UNPROFOR under any option that would risk subjecting their forces to continuing Bosnian Serb attacks. Needless to say, Russian support for any robust military action against the Serbs remains highly problematic.

Option 1: Lifting the Arms Embargo

Under this option, we would agree to lift the UN arms embargo against Bosnia (and presumably Croatia) in return for Bosnian government agreement to the Contact Group proposal. This has long been a key Bosnian government demand and is also the option set forth in the Churkin proposal. We would probably also be expected to help them in their rearmament effort, by providing them with equipment and helping to transport it.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Any decision to lift the arms embargo, however, would be almost certain to provoke an immediate and violent Bosnian Serb response against UNPROFOR, the eastern enclaves, and Sarajevo. Understanding this, our European allies might insist on pulling out of UNPROFOR as a condition for agreeing to any lift option. Should UNPROFOR pull out in connection with this option, the Bosnian Serbs would almost certainly be able to overrun the eastern enclaves and starve Sarejevo into submission long before arms shipments to the government could begin to turn the tide. We could quickly find ourselves faced with a choice between upping the military stakes significantly, as contemplated in option 2 below, or acquiescing in the fall of Sarajevo and the eastern enclaves.

For this option to work, therefore, the Europeans would have to be persuaded to stay in UNPROFOR, while taking prudent measures to protect their forces -- a formidable task. Even if they could be persuaded to stay, in order to make this option work both the Europeans and the Russians would need to agree in advance that existing close air support and air-strike authority would be vigorously used to counter attacks against UNPROFOR and the safe areas.

The key limitations to a lift-only approach are that the UN remains very hesitant about using force, and that Serb military advances outside safe areas would not be covered. Dealing with this latter problem might require agreement to create new exclusion zones to stop the Serbs from undertaking offensive military actions elsewhere, as we considered doing at Brčko, and which is discussed in greater detail under Option 3, Variation 2 below.

Option 2: Lift and Strike

This would be a more aggressive variation on the lifting the arms embargo option. Under this option, lifting the embargo would be combined from the outset with a determined bombing campaign aimed at Bosnian Serb strategic military and economic infrastructure targets. By agreeing to carry out substantial air strikes from the very outset, we would help ensure that the Bosnian government survived until it received sufficient military equipment to become competitive on the battlefield. At the end of this transition period, the bombing campaign would end and the Bosnians would assume responsibility for their own defense.

Under this option the Europeans would also be likely to pull out of UNPROFOR. In the absence of UNPROFOR ground tactical air control parties (TACPs) we would find it difficult to provide anything more than limited tactical support for Bosnian government ground forces; there would be increased risks of collateral damage to civilian populations as a result. Larger strategic military and economic infrastructure targets could be more readily identified and attacked, but the risk to collateral targets would remain. Should the absence of TACPs cause serious problems, we might need to consider inserting our own or training Bosnian government or other volunteer forces (such as the Pakistanis or Turks) to perform this function.

The promise of aggressive international military intervention as proposed under this option would no doubt prove very attractive to the Bosnian government. On the other hand, it would be more difficult to sell to the Russians and our European allies. It would also raise questions about the purpose and duration of our own involvement. Our involvement would presumably last until the Bosnian Serbs agreed to the Contact Group proposal -- or some lesser territorial offer as a penalty for their initial refusal -- or until the Bosnian government was capable of taking over the task of its own defense. Some believe, however, that committed ourselves to protecting and rearming the Bosnians, we would have a continuing obligation to come to their aid if they suffered further losses after the transition period. Thus, we could face the prospect of an open-ended or escalating involvement. Direct intervention by Serbia in the conflict would also seriously complicate our task.

Option 3: Strike Without Lift

A third option would be to agree to carry out air strikes against the Bosnian Serbs in certain circumstances but without simultaneously lifting the arms embargo. This could help prevent a widening of the ground war while still bringing military pressure to bear against the Bosnian Serbs to match government acceptance of a Contact Group proposal. Other things being equal, a strike-without-lift option is likely to be less attractive to the government than one which provides for lifting the arms embargo. The more robust the strike option, however, the more attractive the government would find it.

The Europeans would probably prefer this option because it allows for punitive action against the Serbs without directly enhancing the Bosnian government's independent war-fighting capacity. It thus would maintain international control over the scope of the military action without unduly encouraging increased government war and negotiating aims. The Europeans might also be more willing to remain in UNPROFOR under this option, although this would depend in part on which of the variations set out below was adopted, and the feasibility of redeploying to more secure positions. The more robust the strike option, the more likely that UNPROFOR would pull out.

The reaction of the Bosnian Serbs to a strike-only option cannot be predicted with certainty. There is a good chance that they would retaliate against UNPROFOR and Western civilian personnel, and that they could pull out of all negotiations to show their defiance -- raising the question of whether we would be prepared to escalate further.

Variation 1: Strict Enforcement of Existing Regimes

Under this variation, we would agree to bring added pressure to bear on the Bosnian Serbs by more strictly enforcing existing NATO exclusion zone decisions. Any violations of the exclusion zones would be met by retaliatory air strikes as called for in the February 9 and April 22 NAC decisions. This would require a new understanding with the UN and UNPROFOR that would, effectively, pre-authorize air strikes and provision of close air support.

Ideally, coordination would be limited to the requirements established for the No-Fly Zone (i.e., the UNPROFOR commander could request a temporary suspension or delay of air operations in circumstances where he had concerns about the safety of UN personnel; but there would be no dual political decision-making). The NATO theater commander would also be authorized to declare new exclusion zones around other safe areas pursuant to the April 22 NAC decisions.

Variation 2: Establishing New Air Strike Authorities

This variation would build on the previous approach. In addition to enforcement of existing regimes, exclusion zones could be established around the safe areas without any need for triggering by provocative Bosnian Serb actions as required under the April 22 decisions. In addition, we could agree to authorize the NATO commander to declare exclusion or no-fire zones in any area where the Bosnian Serbs mass men and matériel, carry out shelling, or conduct offensive military operations. This could include forcing them to withdraw from areas where they have currently massed forces, as in Brčko. The objective would be to freeze the Bosnian Serb military in place and deter or prevent it from going on the offensive anywhere in Bosnia.

Variation 3: Air Strikes to Compel Serb Agreement

Although variation 2 would make it difficult for the Bosnian Serbs to conduct offensive operations and could even make it difficult for them to defend themselves against Bosnian government attack, air power could be even more damaging if variations 1 and 2 were combined with the threat or implementation of a bombing campaign against strategic military and economic infrastructure targets. This could be restricted to targets within Bosnia, as set out in the Operational Options paper agreed in the NATO Military Committee on August 8, 1993, or it could go beyond this, to include the Drina bridges and, perhaps, military support facilities inside Serbia proper.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

This variation could be implemented from the outset or be held in reserve if variations 1 and/or 2 did not compel Bosnian Serb agreement to the Contact Group proposal. Under either scenario, we could agree to give the Bosnian Serbs an ultimatum: that they either accept the Contact Group proposal or withdraw to certain specified territories by a specific date.

Of the three variations, the Bosnian government would clearly prefer the third. Although they would prefer a intensive bombing campaign from the outset -- particularly if the arms embargo remained in place -- they might consider agreeing to begin with variations 1 and 2 if they had definitive assurances that variation 3 would be implemented in the event that the first two options failed to produce the desired results. Agreeing to lift the arms embargo if variation 3 failed to produce Bosnian Serb agreement by a specified date would further enhance their interest.

Conversely, the Russians and some of our European allies would be unlikely to agree to begin with variation 3 under this scenario, but might be more amenable to a step-by-step implementation of the variations leading up to and through variation 3 in a specifically defined and agreed manner. They would balk, however, at attacks on targets in Serbia proper.

Postscript: Tightening Sanctions

In tandem with the above options, we could, in concert with our Allies and the Russians, threaten to tighten further the sanctions against Serbia (more aggressive monitoring of Serbian borders, greater economic and infrastructure assistance for front-line states, and a new UNSC resolution aimed at closing loopholes and imposing additional financial sanctions). However, such a threat would not be an effective approach on its own: the threatened measures could worsen the economic situation in Serbia, but would not likely be seen by either party as a sufficient incentive to settle. It would also be viewed domestically as a weak policy response to Serb intransigence.

National Intelligence Council Memorandum

Lifting the Arms Embargo: Impact on the War in Bosnia

Key Points A UN Security Council decision to lift the arms embargo against Bosnia would intensify the fighting and would not lead to early termination of the conflict.

- It would help Bosnian Government forces to defend the main body of government-held territory but would not enable them to retake significant amounts of lost territory or defend their enclaves against determined Serb offensives. 3.5c

Croatia's acquiescence would be necessary before large quantities of arms could reach Bosnian forces. The Croats are permitting additional deliveries of light weapons—small arms, mortars, and antitank missiles—but would be leery of large amounts of heavy weaponry—tanks and artillery. 3.5c

Bosnian Serbs would not be cowed into concessions if the embargo were lifted. They would bank on Belgrade's sending more weapons and supplies to offset major shipments of heavy weapons to Bosnian Government forces.

- The Bosnian Serbs would respond forcefully, attacking isolated enclaves and detaining UN personnel. 3.5c

UNPROFOR's operations would be subject to Bosnian Serb retaliatory attacks. Many states would withdraw their forces, and the mission would collapse. 3.5c

This memorandum was prepared by the National Intelligence Officer for General Purpose Forces and the National Intelligence Officer for Europe. It was coordinated with representatives of CIA, DIA, State/INR, NSA, and the military services.

Lifting the Arms Embargo: Impact on the War in Bosnia

SCOPE NOTE: This memorandum assumes that the arms embargo is lifted by the UN Security Council, and that it is lifted selectively against Bosnia (and perhaps Croatia) but remains in force, along with other sanctions, against Serbia and the Bosnian Serbs. We do not address the prospects for, or obstacles to, achieving such agreement in the United Nations. 3.5c

Lifting the arms embargo would require redefining the no fly zone (NFZ), safe areas, and exclusion zones and the role of NATO in enforcing them. If these were not changed, NATO would become directly engaged with the Bosnian Serbs. Our analysis assumes that the NFZ, safe areas, and exclusion zones will fundamentally change with the lifting of the embargo. 3.5c

Effect of the Embargo

One-sided impact

The main impact of the embargo on supplying arms to governments of the former Yugoslavia has been to limit the Bosnian Government's military capabilities. It has had little impact on Croatia, and virtually no effect on Serbia and the Bosnian Serbs. 3.5c

The UN Arms Embargo

The United Nations imposed a general and complete embargo on all deliveries of arms and military equipment to Yugoslavia on September 25, 1991, under Security Council Resolution 713. The Resolution did not specify embargoed items, but most Western nations use the COCOM International Munitions List or more comprehensive national laws. Other nations have similar lists of items considered war materiel, although they are usually less detailed and may omit some dual-use items. Russia, for example, probably uses a list inherited from the USSR that does not include military transport helicopters. 3.5c

Security Council resolution 724 of December 1991 created a committee to oversee the embargo. In January 1992, Resolution 727 declared that the embargo applies to all successor states of Yugoslavia. 3.5c

Some leakage to Bosnian forces

Since Croatia cut off arms deliveries in April 1993 the Bosnian Government has been sustained by weapons stockpiled in Bosnia by the former Yugoslavia, by limited indigenous production of arms, and by captured small caliber weapons and ammunition. Malaysia and

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Iran have smuggled in limited amounts of ordnance and munition components. In addition, the Bosnian Government probably is purchasing some military goods on the gray market. For example, it has obtained Red Arrow antitank guided missiles—limited quantities of both launchers and missiles. 3.5c

The success of the embargo in denying armaments to Bosnian Government forces stems from their geographic isolation: they are surrounded by Serbs and Croats. 3.5c

Serbs largely self-sufficient

The Bosnian Serbs are largely self sufficient in armaments. When Yugoslavia collapsed, they inherited most of the Yugoslav Army's military stockpile in Bosnia-Herzegovina, which was scaled to fight a war of attrition against a Soviet invasion and so was very large. In fact, the Bosnian Serbs are largely fighting the war out of in-country Yugoslav inventory, which at the current rate will permit them to fight on for years.

- Serbia has obtained small amounts of equipment, mostly components used in arms production, in violation of the arms embargo. 3.5c

The Bosnian Government's Wishlist

The Bosnian government seeks a range of light and heavy armament, ammunition, and basic supplies. It wants first the weapons it can quickly absorb; Bosnian forces have the experience and infrastructure needed to use mortars, recoilless rifles, and antitank missiles effectively.

Light armament more easily absorbed

- Small-caliber armaments, mortars, antitank weapons, and shoulder-fired surface-to-air missile systems are already in the Bosnian Government arsenal, and more could be assimilated quickly. These weapons provide an increased—but not assured—capability to protect existing territory and population centers. Moreover, these kinds of weapons are plentiful on the world market through official and private sources; Turkey has stockpiled such weapons in Istanbul, for example, and earmarked them for Bosnian Government forces.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Heavy armament more difficult

- The Bosnian government also would seek heavy weapons—tanks and artillery. Obtaining these weapons—and the training essential to use them effectively—is fundamental to ultimate Bosnian government aims: rolling back Serb gains and seizing sufficient territory to block the linkage of Serb-held territory in eastern and western Bosnia via Brcko and the Posavina corridor. 3.5c

The Bosnian Government has millions of dollars set aside for weapons purchases. Dramatic improvement in Bosnian internal distribution systems makes it likely that once in Bosnian government hands, weapons would very quickly reach most forces in the field. 3.5c

Role of Croatia

Croatian support would be critical

Barring an unlikely UN decision to take and hold territory, including airfields, as staging areas for arms deliveries, Croatian acquiescence would be necessary before materiel could be delivered to the Bosnian Government. If the Croatians agreed, the arms spigot could be opened almost immediately.

- Zagreb has already allowed weapons and supplies to reach Bosnian Government forces. 3.5c

But Croats would take a cut...

The Croatians would facilitate movement of light arms primarily because they would take a percentage of everything coming in, especially of items they want themselves—for example, secure communications gear and logistic support equipment, including transport. 3.5c

...and would limit heavy weapons

Unless the Croatian government was satisfied with the progress in implementing the Bosnian-Croat Federation in Bosnia, specifically the creation of a joint Bosnian Croat and Government army, it would be reluctant to permit the delivery of heavy weapons to Bosnia. The Croats would fear that such weapons would be turned against the Bosnian Croats. (The two sides fought a bitter struggle over the last year.) Nevertheless, Croatia would not confront what it perceived to be the will of the international community and would not block deliveries in the face of firm US diplomatic pressure—if it also received similar arms. 3.5c

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Delivery Routes

Because airfields can be easily closed, especially by artillery attack, airlifts and air drops probably would be able to provide only limited amounts of light weaponry. Therefore, most weapons shipments would be across land from the port of Ploce and perhaps Split. 3.5c

Bosnia's topography channels most major ground routes from Croatia to the Bosnian interior through a few key roads. If the Serbs interdicted several key roads, for example, they would be able to stop most arms shipments from reaching territory controlled by the Bosnian Government. Because humanitarian relief convoys from Croatia follow the same routes the arms shipments probably would use, interdiction of these routes could slow or block humanitarian aid deliveries to Bosnian Muslims. 3.5c

At the same time, Bosnia's rugged terrain, heavy forestation, and numerous tracks and trails would make small shipments of arms virtually impossible to block. Early in the conflict, Bosnian Government forces used tracks and trails that crossed Bosnian Serb-controlled territory to deliver significant amounts of food and weapons to the Gorazde enclave. 3.5c

The Current Military Balance

Bosnian Serbs have the edge

Bosnian Serb forces have been effective on the battlefield because they are better organized and equipped. In addition, during early military actions they seized key areas, routes, and equipment stocks that continue to confer a military advantage. Bosnian Government forces have advantages in manpower and morale and have improved their leadership and organization since mid-1993. Bosnian Croat forces are less effective and depend on support from the Croatian Army, which currently has at least several thousand troops and several dozen tanks and artillery pieces deployed in Bosnia (see table). 3.5c

Impact and Implications of Lifting the Embargo

Lifting the arms embargo against the Bosnian Government would intensify the fighting and would not lead to early termination of the conflict. Instead, the apparent international tilt toward the Bosnian Government would embolden it to fight on, leading to a more violent Bosnian Serb reaction. 3.5c

Government forces would take action

With additional weapons, the Bosnian Government would expand its current offensive military effort to retake territory from the Bosnian Serbs. Bosnia's leaders would be encouraged to maximize their territorial demands and would reject any negotiating formula that did not meet this goal. 3.5c

...but could not roll Serbs back

With additional light weaponry, Government infantry could do more, but without the means to offset the overwhelming Serb advantage in heavy artillery, Bosnian Government forces could not retake significant territory from the Serbs. Additional light arms would help secure Government gains in central Bosnia, but they would not permit Government forces to successfully defend the more isolated Bosnian enclaves—Gorazde, Srebrenica, Zepa, and possibly Bihac—against determined Serb offensives. Indeed, if lifting the embargo resulted in the UN's departure from the enclaves—a highly likely outcome—these isolated locations would fall quickly. 3.5c

Heavy weaponry would be more expensive and difficult to field. While such weapons would provide some immediate help, an extended training period would be required for the Bosnian Army to field units capable of conquering significant amounts of territory. The difficulties of integrating newly delivered weaponry would be compounded if Government forces acquired diverse weapons types and models, or if training programs were not part of the acquisition deals. 3.5c

Bosnian Serbs would respond

We judge that the Bosnian Serbs—whose conduct Belgrade cannot completely control—would respond forcefully, and probably preemptively, to a lifting of the arms embargo. They would immediately go on the offensive, attacking Government enclaves and detaining UN and non-government organization personnel, and would call for additional support from Belgrade. In an attempt to prevent or complicate arms shipments via Croatia, Bosnian Serbs might coordinate operations with Krajina Serbs, risking a reopening of the war in Croatia. Bosnian Serbs would break off any active peace negotiations, claiming a lack of good faith and impartiality on the part of the international community and the UN. 3.5c

Belgrade would increase support

Belgrade would not be cowed but would be unlikely to act precipitously in the event of a UN decision to lift the arms embargo. For example, Belgrade probably would not extend the geographic scope of the conflict beyond Bosnia. Nevertheless, we judge that Serbia would provide whatever support was needed to keep the Bosnian Serbs from being defeated and might take steps that would escalate the conflict within Bosnia, including:

- Sending in "volunteers."
- Providing more direct logistic—and perhaps lethal—support for Bosnian Serb attacks on enclaves and Bosnian airfields.
- Attempting to mine ports receiving arms shipments. 3.5c

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

What would it take to make a difference?

The greatest shortfall Bosnian Government forces face is their firepower disadvantage with Bosnian Serb forces. Government forces are rarely able to respond to Serb artillery attacks or counter Serb armor. This disadvantage is most apparent when Government forces are forced to defend large population centers under siege or challenge determined Serb offensives supported by heavy artillery and armor. 3.5c

To recapture and hold meaningful amounts of territory from the Serbs, Bosnian Government forces would need:

- Large numbers of tanks, artillery (of caliber greater than 100mm), antitank weapons, and counterbattery radars.
- C3 and training to use this equipment in coordinated offensive operations (and the time—several months—in which to train).
- The infrastructure to supply and repair heavy weapons on the battlefield. 3.5c

UN troops likely targets

UN operations on Serb-held territory would quickly collapse if the arms embargo were lifted. UN personnel would become targets for Serbian retribution. For this reason, West European UNPROFOR contributors almost certainly would pull their forces out. Alternatively, the UN could withdraw its personnel before the lifting of the embargo, but this move would tip off the Serbs and prompt them to act. 3.5c

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Alternatively, a De Facto Lifting of the Embargo

Without a UN Security Council resolution, the arms embargo could be lifted "de facto," by Western powers turning a "blind eye" to increasingly significant violations or unilaterally by the US. We judge, however, that the ultimate outcome for Bosnia would be much the same as under a formal lifting by the UN, although the dynamics—especially political—would be different.

- Violations of the embargo on a scale large enough to make a difference in Bosnian military capabilities would be noticed and hard for Western governments to plausibly deny.
- Militarily significant violations would elicit most of the same reactions by the parties—especially the Bosnian Serbs—as a formal lifting.
- A unilateral US lifting of the embargo would strain US relations with Russia and the NATO Allies, principally Britain and France.
- It would undermine other UN arms embargoes, for example, in Iraq. 3.5c

Wider implications

In addition to the military effects of lifting the arms embargo, other immediate and longer term ramifications would be likely. (S NF)

On the plus side, lifting the embargo could:

- Boost US and Western credibility with members of the Organization of Islamic Countries, particularly Turkey.
- Force Bosnian Serbs, and to some extent Belgrade, to pay a higher military price to continue the war in Bosnia.
- Put new strains on Belgrade's economic ability to support the Bosnian Serbs. 3.5c

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

On the negative side, such action could:

- Lead to renewed fighting between Croatia and Krajina Serbs.
- Highlight the inability of the UN and NATO to end the conflict and bloodshed in Bosnia.
- Further "internationalize" the conflict via introduction of foreign military equipment and trainers.
- Provide opportunities for greater meddling by Iran and other radical states.
- Tempt EU members to wash their hands of the crisis and pin the blame for greater bloodshed on the United States--which will be viewed as responsible for post-embargo developments in Bosnia.
- Undermine economic sanctions and arms embargoes against Serbia.
- Encourage other non-Serb minorities (for example, ethnic Albanians in Kosovo) to challenge Belgrade's authority in hopes of attracting Western military assistance. 3.5c

OPTIONS PAPER: GIVING THE PARTIES INCENTIVES TO SETTLE

The Problem

A Bosnia settlement along the lines being developed in the Contact Group still appears out of reach because the parties do not have sufficient incentive to settle. The Bosnian government has expressed some willingness to accept a 51/49 solution, but is not likely to do so unless we can assure them that we are prepared to take decisive action to compel the Bosnian Serbs to go along. They will also want firmer assurances regarding U.S. participation in an implementation force. The Bosnian Serbs, on the other hand, have given no indication they would be prepared to accept a 51/49 settlement under current circumstances. Faced with a situation that could continue indefinitely, we should consider the possibility of raising the stakes in the hope of forcing a final settlement.

The Concept: Giving Each Party Incentives

One way to do this would be to take advantage of the stated willingness of the government to accept a 51/49 solution if the international community can provide assurances that the Serbs will be compelled to go along. We could seek EU and Russian agreement to take strong measures against the Bosnian Serbs in case the government agrees to a 51/49 Contact Group proposal and the Serbs do not. We could then make this agreement known to the government, in the hope of getting them to accept the proposal.

The Russians, however, and some of our European allies as well, are likely to balk at the idea of providing incentives only to the government and directing threats only at the Serbs. In order to get the Russians to agree to threaten stern measures against the Bosnian Serbs, therefore, we would almost certainly need to agree to reward the Serbs should they prove willing to settle for 51/49, particularly in a scenario in which the government says no. Although we would risk appearing to pressure the Bosnian government, this is by far the least likely of the two scenarios.

The Churkin Proposal

The above concept is very similar to a proposal already floated by the Russians. Following up on remarks made by Kozyrev at the May 13 Geneva Ministerial, Churkin has suggested to Ambassador Redman that, if the Bosnian government agrees to a 51/49 percent Contact Group proposal and the Bosnian Serbs do not, the arms embargo should be lifted. Conversely, if the Bosnian Serbs agree to the proposal and the government does not, and if the Serbs further unilaterally withdraw to the agreed territorial limits, sanctions would be lifted. If the

Russians are really serious about their proposal (and there is reason for doubt on this score), it might be possible to get them to agree to use some combination of incentives and threats as leverage against the parties.

Should we decide to pursue such an initiative, we need to consider what specific combination of incentives and threats we would use under each scenario. We could then decide to float the proposal with key allies before discussing it with the Russians. If agreement is reached with the EU and Russia to undertake such an initiative, the Contact Group could approach each of the parties with the specific proposal. We will need to consider what constitutes an appropriate response from the parties (i.e. are we asking for acceptance on a take-it-or-leave-it basis, or just as a framework for a settlement). Presumably, we would want them to sign an appropriate document recording their agreement to the proposal. We would also need to consider the relative advantages of informing each party what we are offering to the other.

SCENARIO 1: BOSNIAN SERBS ACCEPT, BOSNIAN GOVERNMENT REFUSES

Although this is by far the least likely scenario, in order to bring the Russians along, we would need to make sure that the carrots offered to the Bosnian Serbs are credible. Since sanctions are the key leverage we have against the Serbs, any credible incentive would have to involve some sanctions relief. A key question is whether we offer sanctions relief on signature of an agreement, or insist on partial or total withdrawal of Serbian forces to the specified territories before initiating sanctions relief. The three numbered options below consider these alternatives; we could choose a single option, or pursue two or three of them in sequential fashion.

Option 1: Sanctions Relief on Signature

The most attractive incentive for the Bosnian Serbs would be to offer them sanctions relief for simply agreeing to a Contact Group 51/49 proposal and signing an appropriate instrument confirming that agreement. This would be a significant departure from our stance to date, whereby sanctions relief would depend on Serb actions to implement the terms of a settlement. But it would reflect the reality that there are few other carrots available. The incentives could be made more or less appealing depending on the amount of relief offered.

A minimalist approach would be to suspend some of the more symbolic sanctions (culture/sports bans, civil air links) and/or implement a more liberal humanitarian exceptions policy in the UN Sanctions Committee, with further steps tied to concrete actions, such as unilateral withdrawal of forces in accordance with the Contact Group map. Alternatively, we could go further -- e.g. to suspend trade and transhipment sanctions on non-strategic goods upon acceptance of the Contact Group map -- with the offer of further relief to follow in return for withdrawals toward the territories allotted them in the proposal. The latter approach would involve actions that would be less reversible, as well as harder to defend domestically.

Option 2: Sanctions Relief for Partial Withdrawal

Under this option, the Serbs would be given initial sanctions relief in return for a partial withdrawal to the territories allotted them in the Contact Group proposal. We could, for example, identify key areas from which we would ask them to withdraw, at which time sanctions relief could begin. Once again, we could agree to provide them with some measure of relief in return for the initial withdrawals, holding the rest in reserve for future withdrawals, or for full withdrawal. Although a less attractive option for the Serbs, this would still give them a greater incentive than requiring full withdrawal at the outset.

Option 3: Sanctions Relief for Full Withdrawal

Under this option, we would provide them with sanctions relief only in return for full withdrawal to the territories given them in the Contact Group map. To make the offer more attractive, we could agree to insert UNPROFOR forces along the new borders to deter government attacks. In return for such withdrawal, we could agree to suspend the full array of UN sanctions envisaged in the EU's front-loaded plan. Suspending rather than lifting sanctions would mean our actions would be reversible, although it would be very difficult in practice to reestablish the enforcement regime. Nevertheless, this would give us at least some leverage in case of backsliding.

The one prominent exception to this is the freeze on assets, whose suspension could not be easily reversed, since the Serbs could take immediate concrete steps to move and hide their assets. We could therefore agree to hold the freeze in place until a Krajina settlement is being implemented, thus giving the Serbs some incentive to settle there and helping to reassure Zagreb (which believes we are firmly committed to maintaining a link between sanctions relief and the Krajina). This would be the one major point of departure from the original EU plan, and might prove acceptable to both the Europeans and the Russians.

While options 1 and 2 would provide the Bosnian Serbs with greater incentive to agree, option 3 would ensure greater Serb compliance, and may be consistent with the proposal floated by Churkin in any event.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Punitive and Other Options

Although the above options focus on providing the Serbs with sanctions relief if they agree to the Contact Group map and the Bosnian government does not, we could also consider taking punitive measures against the government to encourage its agreement. We could disavow our support for lifting the arms embargo, suspend implementation of NATO's air-strike decisions, or threaten to pull out of the humanitarian relief effort. We could modify the Contact Group proposal to reduce the quality of territory designated for the Bosnian government (e.g. grant the Serbs a 4-kilometer wide northern corridor). Punitive measures against the government would be hard to sustain domestically, however, particularly if they seemed likely to cause humanitarian suffering or further battlefield reverses.

Another possibility would be to offer, or to encourage the Russians and others to offer, the Serbs economic and other positive incentives that go beyond sanctions relief. Any such encouragement, however, would be inconsistent with the current U.S./EU position that Serbia should not receive reconstruction or other economic assistance until the disputes over Krajina and Kosovo have been satisfactorily resolved.

SCENARIO 2: BOSNIAN GOVERNMENT AGREES, BOSNIAN SERBS REFUSE

Just as sanctions relief is the key carrot we could offer the Bosnian Serbs, a willingness to act militarily against the Serbs is probably the only credible carrot we have that might induce the government to accept a 51/49 Contact Group proposal. The Europeans and the Russians, to the extent they can support any military action against the Serbs, would want to ensure that it maximizes pressure on Pale but avoids encouraging an escalation of Bosnian government war and negotiating aims. The Europeans are also likely to insist on pulling out of UNPROFOR under any option that would risk subjecting their forces to continuing Bosnian Serb attacks. Needless to say, Russian support for any robust military action against the Serbs remains highly problematic.

Option 1: Lifting the Arms Embargo

Under this option, we would agree to lift the UN arms embargo against Bosnia (and presumably Croatia) in return for Bosnian government agreement to the Contact Group proposal. This has long been a key Bosnian government demand and is also the option set forth in the Churkin proposal. We would probably also be expected to help them in their rearmament effort, by providing them with equipment and helping to transport it.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Any decision to lift the arms embargo, however, would be almost certain to provoke an immediate and violent Bosnian Serb response against UNPROFOR, the eastern enclaves, and Sarajevo. Understanding this, our European allies might insist on pulling out of UNPROFOR as a condition for agreeing to any lift option. Should UNPROFOR pull out in connection with this option, the Bosnian Serbs would almost certainly be able to overrun the eastern enclaves and starve Sarejevo into submission long before arms shipments to the government could begin to turn the tide. We could quickly find ourselves faced with a choice between upping the military stakes significantly, as contemplated in option 2 below, or acquiescing in the fall of Sarajevo and the eastern enclaves.

For this option to work, therefore, the Europeans would have to be persuaded to stay in UNPROFOR, while taking prudent measures to protect their forces -- a formidable task. Even if they could be persuaded to stay, in order to make this option work both the Europeans and the Russians would need to agree in advance that existing close air support and air-strike authority would be vigorously used to counter attacks against UNPROFOR and the safe areas.

The key limitations to a lift-only approach are that the UN remains very hesitant about using force, and that Serb military advances outside safe areas would not be covered. Dealing with this latter problem might require agreement to create new exclusion zones to stop the Serbs from undertaking offensive military actions elsewhere, as we considered doing at Brčko, and which is discussed in greater detail under Option 3, Variation 2 below.

Option 2: Lift and Strike

This would be a more aggressive variation on the lifting the arms embargo option. Under this option, lifting the embargo would be combined from the outset with a determined bombing campaign aimed at Bosnian Serb strategic military and economic infrastructure targets. By agreeing to carry out substantial air strikes from the very outset, we would help ensure that the Bosnian government survived until it received sufficient military equipment to become competitive on the battlefield. At the end of this transition period, the bombing campaign would end and the Bosnians would assume responsibility for their own defense.

Under this option the Europeans would also be likely to pull out of UNPROFOR. In the absence of UNPROFOR ground tactical air control parties (TACPs) we would find it difficult to provide anything more than limited tactical support for Bosnian government ground forces; there would be increased risks of collateral damage to civilian populations as a result. Larger strategic military and economic infrastructure targets could be more readily identified and attacked, but the risk to collateral targets would remain. Should the absence of TACPs cause serious problems, we might need to consider inserting our own or training Bosnian government or other volunteer forces (such as the Pakistanis or Turks) to perform this function.

The promise of aggressive international military intervention as proposed under this option would no doubt prove very attractive to the Bosnian government. On the other hand, it would be more difficult to sell to the Russians and our European allies. It would also raise questions about the purpose and duration of our own involvement. Our involvement would presumably last until the Bosnian Serbs agreed to the Contact Group proposal -- or some lesser territorial offer as a penalty for their initial refusal -- or until the Bosnian government was capable of taking over the task of its own defense. Some believe, however, that committed ourselves to protecting and rearming the Bosnians, we would have a continuing obligation to come to their aid if they suffered further losses after the transition period. Thus, we could face the prospect of an open-ended or escalating involvement. Direct intervention by Serbia in the conflict would also seriously complicate our task.

Option 3: Strike Without Lift

A third option would be to agree to carry out air strikes against the Bosnian Serbs in certain circumstances but without simultaneously lifting the arms embargo. This could help prevent a widening of the ground war while still bringing military pressure to bear against the Bosnian Serbs to match government acceptance of a Contact Group proposal. Other things being equal, a strike-without-lift option is likely to be less attractive to the government than one which provides for lifting the arms embargo. The more robust the strike option, however, the more attractive the government would find it.

The Europeans would probably prefer this option because it allows for punitive action against the Serbs without directly enhancing the Bosnian government's independent war-fighting capacity. It thus would maintain international control over the scope of the military action without unduly encouraging increased government war and negotiating aims. The Europeans might also be more willing to remain in UNPROFOR under this option, although this would depend in part on which of the variations set out below was adopted, and the feasibility of redeploying to more secure positions. The more robust the strike option, the more likely that UNPROFOR would pull out.

The reaction of the Bosnian Serbs to a strike-only option cannot be predicted with certainty. There is a good chance that they would retaliate against UNPROFOR and Western civilian personnel, and that they could pull out of all negotiations to show their defiance -- raising the question of whether we would be prepared to escalate further.

Variation 1: Strict Enforcement of Existing Regimes

Under this variation, we would agree to bring added pressure to bear on the Bosnian Serbs by more strictly enforcing existing NATO exclusion zone decisions. Any violations of the exclusion zones would be met by retaliatory air strikes as called for in the February 9 and April 22 NAC decisions. This would require a new understanding with the UN and UNPROFOR that would, effectively, pre-authorize air strikes and provision of close air support.

Ideally, coordination would be limited to the requirements established for the No-Fly Zone (i.e., the UNPROFOR commander could request a temporary suspension or delay of air operations in circumstances where he had concerns about the safety of UN personnel; but there would be no dual political decision-making). The NATO theater commander would also be authorized to declare new exclusion zones around other safe areas pursuant to the April 22 NAC decisions.

Variation 2: Establishing New Air Strike Authorities

This variation would build on the previous approach. In addition to enforcement of existing regimes, exclusion zones could be established around the safe areas without any need for triggering by provocative Bosnian Serb actions as required under the April 22 decisions. In addition, we could agree to authorize the NATO commander to declare exclusion or no-fire zones in any area where the Bosnian Serbs mass men and matériel, carry out shelling, or conduct offensive military operations. This could include forcing them to withdraw from areas where they have currently massed forces, as in Brčko. The objective would be to freeze the Bosnian Serb military in place and deter or prevent it from going on the offensive anywhere in Bosnia.

Variation 3: Air Strikes to Compel Serb Agreement

Although variation 2 would make it difficult for the Bosnian Serbs to conduct offensive operations and could even make it difficult for them to defend themselves against Bosnian government attack, air power could be even more damaging if variations 1 and 2 were combined with the threat or implementation of a bombing campaign against strategic military and economic infrastructure targets. This could be restricted to targets within Bosnia, as set out in the Operational Options paper agreed in the NATO Military Committee on August 8, 1993, or it could go beyond this, to include the Drina bridges and, perhaps, military support facilities inside Serbia proper.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

This variation could be implemented from the outset or be held in reserve if variations 1 and/or 2 did not compel Bosnian Serb agreement to the Contact Group proposal. Under either scenario, we could agree to give the Bosnian Serbs an ultimatum: that they either accept the Contact Group proposal or withdraw to certain specified territories by a specific date.

Of the three variations, the Bosnian government would clearly prefer the third. Although they would prefer a intensive bombing campaign from the outset -- particularly if the arms embargo remained in place -- they might consider agreeing to begin with variations 1 and 2 if they had definitive assurances that variation 3 would be implemented in the event that the first two options failed to produce the desired results. Agreeing to lift the arms embargo if variation 3 failed to produce Bosnian Serb agreement by a specified date would further enhance their interest.

Conversely, the Russians and some of our European allies would be unlikely to agree to begin with variation 3 under this scenario, but might be more amenable to a step-by-step implementation of the variations leading up to and through variation 3 in a specifically defined and agreed manner. They would balk, however, at attacks on targets in Serbia proper.

Postscript: Tightening Sanctions

In tandem with the above options, we could, in concert with our Allies and the Russians, threaten to tighten further the sanctions against Serbia (more aggressive monitoring of Serbian borders, greater economic and infrastructure assistance for front-line states, and a new UNSC resolution aimed at closing loopholes and imposing additional financial sanctions). However, such a threat would not be an effective approach on its own: the threatened measures could worsen the economic situation in Serbia, but would not likely be seen by either party as a sufficient incentive to settle. It would also be viewed domestically as a weak policy response to Serb intransigence.

Summary of Conclusions

1. Secretary Christopher will seek Contact Group Ministers' support at the July 30 meeting for the full range of consequences: sanctions tightening, and extension and enforcement of exclusion zones. Recognizing Contact Group consensus on all measures is unlikely, Secretary Christopher will insist on strict enforcement of existing zones and support urgent planning for extension of exclusion zones to other safe areas, which could be implemented in phases. There can be no extension without agreement to strictly enforce existing zones. A strong marker will be laid down that if there are no agreed serious consequences, we will move sooner rather than later to seek multilaterally lifting the arms embargo, and failing that, there will be irresistible pressures to lift unilaterally . 2. Leon Fuerth will develop a strategy to increase high-level U.S. pressure on the British to accede to our view concerning tightening of economic sanctions, specifically dealing with closing down offshore "FRY"enterprises. ~~(S)~~

3. Leon Fuerth and Ambassador Redman will spearhead an effort to urgently develop a strategy to separate Milosevic from the Bosnian Serbs. ~~(S)~~

4. In view of recent Bosnian Serb provocations, the Principals agreed to press for implementation of existing NATO decisions on enforcement of exclusion zones. ~~(S)~~

5. The IWG will urgently examine two scenarios for lifting the arms embargo: (1) with no follow-on U.S. requirement to support the Bosnian Government; and (2) with a presumption that external support will be required. The analysis will include a review of UNPROFOR with a view to the creation of an UNPROFOR II with appropriate mandates. ~~(S)~~

DIPLOMATIC STRATEGY: JULY 30 GENEVA MINISTERIAL

The Communique

Our primary goal for the July 30 Geneva Ministerial should be to reach agreement on a Ministerial Communique announcing the phased imposition of consequences against the Bosnian Serbs. Contact Group Ministers need to commit themselves publicly to tighten sanctions against the Serbs, to extend and strictly enforce the exclusion zones, and to agree that lifting the arms embargo could become inevitable if the Bosnian Serbs continue in their refusal to accept the Contact Group map. This should include, at the very least, tasking NATO to take prompt action to extend the exclusion zones to the other safe areas.

Ministers should also welcome the unconditional Bosnian government acceptance of the map and express disappointment at Bosnian Serb rejection. Contact Group commitment to preserving the territorial integrity of Bosnia within its internationally recognized borders should also be stressed.

Preparing for the Meeting

Although the Communique is the public manifestation of ministerial agreement, we will need to work hard in the run-up to the meeting, and probably in its aftermath as well, to ensure that the consequences package agreed to is as tough as we can possibly make it. This will not be easy, since both the Europeans and the Russians will probably become increasingly nervous at the prospect of bringing increasing pressure, particularly military pressure, to bear against the Serbs. An added complication is the Boutros Ghali letter stating that UNPROFOR should be withdrawn if any additional military steps against the Bosnian Serbs are implemented.

Taking a "No" for a "Yes But"

We may face pressure from the Russians and Europeans to give the Bosnian Serbs more time to change their minds, or even to agree to resume negotiations. Since we have already agreed with the Russians that we would use the July 30 meeting to present any recalcitrant party with a final deadline for accepting the map, we can agree to give the Serbs an additional week or ten days to do so, at which time the consequences package would begin to be implemented. Under no circumstances, however, should we agree to let the Serbs reopen negotiations.

Another possibility is that the Russians will succeed in convincing the Bosnian Serbs to take a more forthcoming position in the run-up to July 30. To satisfy us as a "yes" they would have to drop all their territorial reservations, as well as their linkages to extraneous issues. We need to make certain that this remains our bottom line, and that we do not permit further negotiations. The case will be more difficult if the Serbs whittle down their objections to the constitutional issue alone. In that case, we would face considerable pressure from both the Russians and the Europeans to provide assurances. Since the Contact Group has already done work in this area, we should be in a position to quickly table a proposal that does not prejudge key constitutional issues, such as partition.

Sanctions and the Russians

In our judgment, no amount of sanctions relief is likely to turn the Bosnian Serb "no" into a "yes." Nonetheless, the Russians have been intimating that unless we drop all sanctions linkages to Krajina and produce a draft UNSC resolution that would essentially lift all sanctions in return for full withdrawal, they might not be able to attend the July 30 meeting, much less agree to a robust consequences package against the Bosnian Serbs. Given the almost certain prospect of war over Krajina if we do not maintain some credible linkages, we cannot afford to give in to this Russian demand. The Russians and we have very similar interests in preventing new hostilities in Krajina, and we worked well together in brokering the Krajina cease-fire earlier this spring. We should play on this theme to win Moscow over to our position.

Our current position would suspend all sanctions against Serbia except those on strategic trade in return for full Bosnian Serb withdrawal to the territories allotted them in the Contact Group map. Strategic trade sanctions would be suspended in return for achievement of a modus vivendi in Krajina, including a cease-fire and confidence-building measures. Although strategic trade is a big-ticket item, we believe that Milosevic has the influence to deliver a modus vivendi in fairly short order. We need to continue to press this position with the Russians and hold firm to our key equities.

The Europeans and the Consequences Package

Tightening Sanctions

Although they very reluctantly agreed to the concept of disincentives for the Serbs, the British and the French do not like what they see when they look down the road to implementation. The British, in particular, do not like any aspect of the consequences package. They have refused to agree to a sanctions tightening resolution that would really shut down FRY offshore operations, since it would throw people working for FRY firms in Britain out of work. Although the UK successfully prevents the repatriation of profits from these firms, others do not, particularly the Cypriots, the Russians and the Greeks. Unless this loophole can be closed, any agreement to tighten sanctions will ring hollow.

Barriers to Strict Enforcement

Strict enforcement of the exclusion zones is an essential--and neuralgic--element of our strategy. The following considerations are in play. In order to implement strict enforcement, we must be prepared to address the following:

- The UK, France and the UN tend to equate strict enforcement with the withdrawal of UNPROFOR from the safe areas, and perhaps from Bosnia. This is the central issue.
- Any NATO decision on strict enforcement will require full key allied support, and must be implemented in order to avoid damaging the Alliance.
- The risks of doing nothing are now seen by many as less than the risk of implementing the disincentives.
- Strict enforcement (even extension) will be widely seen as partisan, involving NATO on the Bosnian side. This is why Boutros Ghali apparently wants to pull UNPROFOR out prior to beginning extension.
- Allied militaries and the UN have opposed going to strict enforcement.
- UNPROFOR's withdrawal will mean the loss of ground observers, which will severely limit the effectiveness of air power.
- Prior to a NATO decision on strict enforcement, we need assurances from UNPROFOR that they will approve the use of NATO air power. (Assuming UNPROFOR will still be there to perform an approval function.)

Implementing Strict Enforcement

Since movement to enforcement is generally understood to mean the withdrawal of UNPROFOR from the enclaves (and perhaps from Bosnia), our Allies, the UN and the Russians are extremely reluctant to implement the military consequences. While never nailed down in the Contact Group, it was understood that tightening of sanctions and extension of the exclusion zones were "less difficult." A phased approach, such as the UK wants, makes sense as long as implementation is not overly lengthy. Strict enforcement would come later, and require a separate (and very difficult) NAC decision. The British seem less concerned about how strict enforcement would be staged, since they have made clear they would have removed their UNPROFOR forces before then. The French may harbor similar sentiments.

Since our Allies, Russia and the UN all want UNPROFOR to remain as long as possible, it is likely to prove very difficult for us to get the strict enforcement we are looking for regardless of what might be agreed to on paper. Sarajevo and Gorazde make clear that the British and French are not prepared to authorize that kind of escalation when their forces are so vulnerably in harms way. Given this fundamental fact, if we need to move to enforcement we may be better off seeing them go sooner rather than later. This could make the transition to lifting the arms embargo easier, although the Russians might balk at taking action in the Security Council regardless of whether UNPROFOR has departed.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

The same arguments would apply to Boutros Ghali's threat to pull out UNPROFOR prior to extension, although we would find ourselves looking at the lift option that much earlier. Although Contact Group partners might try to use Boutros Ghali's threat to delay action, if the Contact Group remains united and agrees to commence extending the exclusion zones by tasking the NAC to take the necessary steps, we can probably keep UNPROFOR in place through the extension phase.

Basic Principles on Strict Enforcement

Although it may be overly ambitious to think that we can agree on all the details of implementing the consequences package prior to July 30, we should at least lay down some fundamental principles and seek agreement to phased implementation of the disincentives package. This will give us time to work the Serbs, keep the pressure on the Russians, and give NATO and UNPROFOR time to refine planning and redeploy forces if needed.

- The first principle should be that tightening sanctions and moving to extend the exclusion zones should begin simultaneously. Otherwise, we will look like we are stalling from the get-go and Congress will be right back at us with pressure for unilateral lift. This problem will only be compounded if we do not get a robust tightening package. The British want to extend the regime to one zone at a time; we should agree as long as they accept simultaneity. If the other Contact Group members balk, our fallback should be to press for as short a period as possible between the beginning of sanctions tightening and exclusion zone extension.

- Our second principle should be that the entire extension stage should not be unduly prolonged, and should take about one month. The point here is the same. Taking more time will make it look like we are stalling and invite the same response.

- In moving through extension and toward strict enforcement, we cannot avoid the consequences for UNPROFOR. Even prior to beginning to extend the exclusion zones, we should encourage UNPROFOR and other UN and civilian personnel to consolidate themselves as far as possible out of harm's way. Our third principle should be that time--perhaps a week, perhaps a bit more--should be set aside before beginning to extend the exclusion zones during which at-risk troops and civilians could move to places of relative safety. We should seriously consider recommending that UNMOs be called in and that UNPROFOR forces guarding weapons depots within the Sarajevo exclusion zone withdraw.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE (TU) 07.26. '94 09:33 NO. 14601201188 PAGE 5

- Given the likelihood that the British and French will want to lead a European exodus from UNPROFOR prior to commencement of strict enforcement, we should provide a stage of perhaps three weeks between the end of extension and the beginning of strict enforcement during which time they and anyone else who wishes could depart. In laying this down as our fourth principle, we should consider making the following points.

- If the Europeans do depart and UNPROFOR unravels we should ensure that this is perceived not as a rout or setback, but as a necessary step to set the stage for more robust military action, up to and including lifting the arms embargo. If UNPROFOR remains, however, we must insist that UNPROFOR agrees that in those new circumstances the dual key arrangement will not be used to thwart genuine implementation of strict enforcement. This should be our fifth principle. We cannot afford a situation in which NATO reconfirms its intent to enforce, and then is still blocked by the UN.

- If UNPROFOR departs prior to strict enforcement, we should be prepared to move quickly to lift the arms embargo. This should be our sixth principle. Whether we move immediately to this stage should depend in large part on whether the Bosnian Serbs took advantage of the departure to take over the eastern enclaves, close the noose around Sarajevo or otherwise terminate the humanitarian relief effort through areas under their control. Although we would presumably respond with air power to such provocations, there would be no reason to delay seeking to rearm the Bosnian government. Assuming the Serbs did not engage in provocations, then we should begin the process of building support for multi-lateral lifting as the final element of pressure on the Serbs.

- Assuming that Bosnian Serb actions do not precipitate immediate movement to lift, the process of implementing strict enforcement in each of the zones should not be unduly delayed. Although we could agree to progressive strict enforcement, beginning perhaps with Sarajevo and Gorazde and then moving on to the others, the entire process should not take any longer than one month to complete. The reasons here are the same as for the extension stage. This should be our seventh principle.

- Given past Bosnian Serb behavior, there is good reason to believe that they will respond sooner rather than later to a ministerial decision to implement the consequences package against them. They have already managed to shut down Sarajevo airport in a show of displeasure. Such relatively minor behavior could easily escalate out of control, with hostages taken prior to consolidation, the humanitarian relief effort through Serb territories shut down, and perhaps UNPROFOR forces themselves directly attacked. We need to frame these possibilities for the other Contact Group members and seek agreement that in such a situation we would need to respond quickly and decisively, including rapidly moving through the extension and strict enforcement, directly to lifting the embargo. This should be our eighth principle. We should also explore whether a prudent warning from all or some of the members of the Contact Group of the military consequences of such behavior is advisable.

Although we should seek agreement to as many of the above principles as possible, other Contact Group members are unlikely to be willing to agree to all of them at this time. Nonetheless, pressing these principles forward will give the Europeans and the Russians a good idea of our own view of the situation and of our determination to follow through. At the very least, we need to produce ministerial agreement to ask the NAC to produce the requisite decision on extending the exclusion zones.

Lifting the Arms Embargo

At the July 5 ministerial, Secretary Christopher reminded ministers of Congressional efforts to unilaterally lift the arms embargo and made clear that we beat back these efforts--barely--only because a negotiating process was in train that would either produce a peace settlement or ultimately lead to multilateral lift. The Secretary made clear that if the Contact Group effort did not produce either result, pressure in the Congress would redouble and could prove overpowering.

At this key ministerial meeting, we need to make clear that the current Contact Group effort is the last best hope we have to produce peace through a negotiated settlement. In putting forward the consequences package the Contact Group has made use of all the leverage available to the international community. If the Bosnian Serbs do not accept peace on these terms, then the Contact Group has no choice but to implement the consequences against them. If the international community steps back from this effort, then it will have conceded victory to the Bosnian Serbs and accepted a precedent that can only have the gravest consequences for stability in the region.

Although the Secretary laid down a marker on July 5, we now need to go beyond this and make clear that we will not permit this to happen. We need to let them know that if the other members of the Contact Group waver and step back from vigorous implementation of the consequences package, including multilateral lift when the time comes, we will have no choice but to move together with the Congress to unilaterally lift the arms embargo, and to provide the Bosnian government with the arms and air support they would need to carry the conflict to the Bosnian Serbs.

~~CONFIDENTIAL~~
DECL: OADR

July 25, 1994

NEW EXCLUSION ZONES AND STRICT ENFORCEMENT

The Contact Group agreed that if the Bosnian Serbs reject the proposed territorial settlement, NATO could impose Gorazde-type exclusion zones around the other safe areas -- Srebrenica, Zepa, Bihac and Tuzla. In addition, NATO could strictly enforce the exclusion zones (which would require that new instructions be given to UNPROFOR, to ensure that it approves the use of air power when NATO decides to strike).

Declaring new zones around established safe areas would require a NAC decision demanding that the Bosnian Serbs withdraw all their military personnel and weapons from around the other safe areas and prohibiting heavy weapon and ground attacks. If the Bosnian Serbs fail to comply, their military forces in proximity to the safe areas, including support facilities, would be subject, with UN approval, to NATO air strikes.

Timing: The NAC could declare new exclusion zones around the other safe areas and NATO could implement strict enforcement at once or in phases. Assuming that -- as the British and French want -- new exclusion zones are created first, followed by strict enforcement, we should press to have the time period during which the new exclusion zones are created made as short as possible; Bihac and Tuzla are the most difficult cases, given the array of forces in these areas. The "strict enforcement" decision should be taken shortly thereafter to maintain credibility. Enforcement may be phased in as well, beginning with Gorazde and Sarajevo.

Risks to UNPROFOR: The creation of new zones, and especially their strict enforcement, will be perceived by the Serbs as a UN/NATO intervention on the side of the Bosnian Government. As risk to its forces increases, UNPROFOR should:

- o redeploy from exposed positions (e.g. heavy weapons sites);
- o withdraw from the safe areas; or
- o withdraw completely from Bosnia.

NATO's Military Committee sees these steps as virtually undifferentiated, simply stages in a withdrawal process. UNPROFOR should be prepared to redeploy on short notice on the date that Contact Group Foreign Ministers give the Bosnian Serbs their final ultimatum on accepting the map. Isolated UNPROFOR units should be redeployed before that date. However, even if UNPROFOR redeploys from exposed positions, it would remain a lightly armed peacekeeping force not equipped for combat. These withdrawals would limit UNPROFOR's ability to carry out its mandate, including protection of humanitarian relief convoys and monitoring the safe areas and the heavy weapons collection sites around Sarajevo.

If we move to strict enforcement, the UK and France must take the lead to get UNPROFOR out of harm's way. The UN may offer some assistance but past experience suggests they will not move quickly. We may be asked to help support the withdrawal. In response to limited NATO bombing around Gorazde, the Bosnian Serbs closed all convoy routes and stopped all ground and air delivery of humanitarian aid, took some UNPROFOR personnel hostage, confiscated UNPROFOR equipment and fired on NATO aircraft. We must be prepared for a similar -- or harsher -- reaction should NATO again use air power. The UK and the UN/SYG will insist on UNPROFOR withdrawal prior to strict enforcement. UNPROFOR troops in the Krajina present a difficult problem: withdrawal could help precipitate a Croat-Serb confrontation; staying puts ten thousand UNPROFOR troops at increased risk of Serb retaliation.

One partial way to address these problems would be to establish a time period of up to several weeks between the end of the extension period and the beginning of strict enforcement, during which time those UNPROFOR forces that wished to depart could do so. The remaining UNPROFOR forces could use the time to further consolidate around Sarajevo, and possibly in the interior cores of the other safe areas (the Turks have indicated a willingness to do this). We should be aware that most of the remaining forces are likely to be from Muslim countries -- Turkey, Malaysia -- and would be seen as staying to assist the Bosnian Government. In addition, without the logistical network set up by the UK and France, they would have difficulty maintaining their forces in Bosnia. A British and French withdrawal will result in the de facto end of UNPROFOR.

Moving to Strict Enforcement: We need assurances before deciding on strict enforcement that the UN/SYG is on board, and that UNPROFOR will approve the use of NATO air power. UNPROFOR, at the direction of the UN/SYG, should agree in advance that NATO can carry out strikes for a fixed period of time against Bosnian Serb forces and their support facilities. Our decision on strict enforcement should be:

- o transparent, and give the Serbs time to change their minds and sign on to the Contact Group proposals;
- o preceded by a warning to the Serbs by the Contact Group that attacks against UN/aid personnel or hostage taking will elicit an appropriate military response;
- o accompanied by UNPROFOR redeployment.

Other Bosnian Serb Reactions: Reacting either to new exclusion zones or strict enforcement, the Bosnian Serbs may step up military activity in areas not covered by the exclusion zones, such as Maglaj or Brcko. In order for NATO to respond directly, other than in defense of UNPROFOR, we would need a new Security Council resolution authorizing further NATO action (such as creating a new exclusion zone in the area of the offensive). The Serbs may also take hostages from among the many civilian UN and NGO humanitarian aid workers spread throughout Bosnia. If NATO plans to implement strict enforcement, and UNPROFOR is withdrawing, it would be prudent for aid workers to withdraw as well (at least from areas where the Serbs can take them hostage).

Effects of Creating and Strictly Enforcing Exclusion Zones

The creation of new exclusion zone is unlikely to force the Bosnian Serbs to settle. While strict enforcement of those zones would rachet up the pressure on the Serbs, it could also undermine the continuation of a Western troop presence in Bosnia and exacerbate fissures between NATO and the UN and within the Alliance.

The creation of new exclusion zones around Bihac, Tuzla, Zepa, and Srebrenica without their strict enforcement will place much of Bosnia's Muslim population under Western protection but will have little military or diplomatic impact on the Bosnian conflict.

-- The sites for the new zones, which have already been declared safe havens, are not the current scenes of major fighting.

-- The Serbs and the Muslims probably will redeploy their forces in the zones to more contentious areas. Refugees may try to return to areas under Serb control within the zones, increasing ethnic tensions there.

New exclusion zones are not likely to propel the Serbs into accepting the Contact Group plan. Instead, they are likely to increase their harassment of UN personnel in Bosnia by blocking UN resupply convoys, aggravating UN troops with small-arms fire, and restricting the UN's freedom of movement.

-- The UN said that Bosnian Serb Army Commander Mladic on Monday threatened to "make life difficult" for UN forces beginning on 30 July, when the Contact Group foreign ministers discuss how to try to reverse the Serbs' rejection of the peace plan.

-- Bosnian Serbs have already stepped up actions against the UN, probably to remind the Contact Group of the potential costs of their decisions. In Sarajevo, Bosnian Serb forces may have hit as many as five UN aircraft with small-arms fire late last week and attempted to withdraw heavy weapons from storage sites. On Sunday, Serb forces moved an artillery piece into the Gorazde exclusion zone and fired on Muslim civilians.

EO 13526 1.4c

The Bosnian Government has indicated that it will complain bitterly if the international community does not act quickly and decisively to compel Serb acceptance of the Contact Group plan, according to press 1.4c Sarajevo probably will attempt to tie the credibility of the Contact Group, the UN, and NATO to international support for more aggressive action.

-- Bosnian President Izetbegovic told the press that his government would drop their support for the plan if the Serbs maintain their demands or the major powers fail to act.

-- Bosnia's UN Ambassador Sacirbey noted that "it was time for the Contact Group to show it has some kind of teeth." (b)(3)

Once the international community moves to strictly enforce the exclusion zones, the Bosnian Serbs probably will dramatically step up their pressure on UNPROFOR and relief agencies.

1.4c

-- After NATO airstrikes around Gorazde this spring, Bosnian Serb President Karadzic, charging that the UN

had sided with the Muslims, placed UN personnel under house arrest and attempted to remove Serb weapons from UN collection sites around Sarajevo. (b)(3)

The Bosnian Serbs probably will continue to reject the plan in hopes they can exploit any rifts between Contact Group members, and the UN and NATO, to minimize the possibility of action against them. The Serbs will escalate their tests of the international community's resolve unless they face a threat that they calculate will inflict severe damage to their forces.

-- The Bosnian Serb military remains unintimidated by the threat of NATO military strikes, a point Mladic has made to various Western interlocutors. Karadzic perhaps is more fearful, but in the face of a perceived onslaught by NATO forces, the Bosnian Serb leadership, which thrives on feelings of persecution, probably will rally around the cause of zealous nationalism.

-- Even Milosevic, who would prefer acceptance of the Contact Group plan, worries that he will have to bow to domestic pressure to help his Bosnian Serb brothers if they come under Western attack, according to special intelligence.

-- The Bosnian Muslims, meanwhile, would take advantage of airstrikes against the Bosnian Serbs by continuing their operations outside of the zones and by resupplying their troops. (b)(3)

The burden of strict enforcement of the zones is likely to alter seriously Western involvement in UNPROFOR and exacerbate fissures between NATO and the UN and within NATO.

-- 1.4c

without the continued presence of UNPROFOR, the eastern enclaves probably cannot survive. Even if UNPROFOR stays, the West European are likely to reduce their troop commitments, increasing UN reliance on Islamic contributors.

Revised July 25

Goals	Sanctions Levers
Stage 1: Serbs Accept Map: FRY Gov't endorses Contact Group territorial proposal, Bosnian Serbs sign, Bosnian Serb Parliament ratifies.	UNSC Resolution allowing commercial air passenger service to Belgrade AND PODGORICA airports servicing and certification of aircraft and incorporating subsequent stages. (Automatic reimposition after 6 months, at 12 months UNSC considers continuation of suspension or lifting.) Sanctions Committee drops objections to requests for humanitarian waivers for pharmaceutical precursors, fertiliser and natural gas. This is reflected in the resolution. Sanctions Committee streamlines procedures to clear backlog and speed processing.
Stage 2: Serbs Withdraw to Allotted Territories: Bosnian Serb forces withdraw to territory designated in the Contact Group territorial proposal.	UNSC Resolution to suspend all remaining sanctions except ban on trade and transhipments of SOME strategic goods*. (Automatic reimposition after 6 months, at 12 months UNSC considers continuation of suspension or lifting.) Would allow: --All imports and exports except SOME strategic goods*, --Services, including financial services and commercial credit, --Air cargo service, --Use of foreign exchange reserves, --Use of available conveyances (but not release of impounded conveyances), --Cultural, sports, S&T, and other contacts. --Release of frozen funds, --Release of impounded vessels, aircraft, rolling stock and vehicles.

Impact of Easing Sanctions

If the UN were again to allow Serbia/Montenegro to import everything except for energy products and basic metals, it would give the "FRY" the ability to restore many of its heavy industries, particularly chemicals, textiles, electronics, transportation, and other heavy equipment.

Eventually, with the reopening of large factories, some workers returning to work, and trade resuming, Belgrade would no longer face the financial crunch or the potential for public unrest which has, at least to some limited degree, been prompting it to maintain diplomatic pressure on the Bosnian Serbs to accept the Contact Group proposal.

-- It is questionable whether Milosevic, even if offered sanctions relief, would be any more able to force Pale into accepting the Contact Group's plan.

Allowing the importation of energy-related equipment would allow Belgrade to repair and refurbish its electric power system which had fallen into severe disrepair over the past two years because of the lack of spare parts. The potential for the system to collapse during heavy winter usage was also a problem putting considerable pressure on Belgrade to get sanctions lifted. Also, the ability to import equipment and spare parts might allow Belgrade to stretch its domestic fuel supplies by adopting energy saving measures.

In addition, the ability to import or even transship some of those goods will improve the FRY's ability to smuggle the remaining prohibited items:

-- Documents for energy-related equipment and motors can be used to disguise shipments of arms and other military imports.

-- Belgrade will also attempt to bring in military vehicles and aircraft under the category that allows imports of civilian items. Likewise, it will try to import tires for military vehicles among civilian orders. UNSCR 820 kept military tires out by prohibiting all tires.

-- The ability to import chemicals will allow greater numbers of rail tanker cars to cross the borders of the frontline states. Neither the SAM team nor local customs services currently inspect the contents of rail tankers, allowing Belgrade to import large quantities of fuel by rail from Thessaloniki and Bulgaria.

DECISION SHEET FOR 7/27 PRINCIPALS' MEETING ON BOSNIA

Strategic Decisions

1. Assuming we could get Contact Group agreement on a tough consequences package, are we ready to face up to its immediate implications: UNPROFOR withdrawal, Serb take-over of the eastern enclaves, the possible fall of Sarajevo, widened conflict, retaliatory air strikes?

2. Can we afford to acquiesce in Serb provocations, given the signal it will send about U.S., NATO, and Contact Group impotence and indecision, and the green light it will give for even more aggressive, offensive action?

3. Or should we step back, bail out and seek a muddle through approach on the grounds that the risks of doing something are greater than the risks of not doing anything?

4. What is our real agenda in Geneva? Should our primary goal be achieving immediate agreement on tough consequences or positioning ourselves to eventually move to lift, preferably multilateral but unilateral if necessary?

Tactical Decisions

5. Do we stake a maximalist position on the consequences package that seeks agreement on the entire menu of disincentives, knowing we will not get agreement, but at least framing the discussions around a higher rung of the escalatory ladder?

6. Or do we opt for a more measured approach, focusing for now on tightened sanctions and extension of exclusion zones only, while deferring steps on other military consequences because of their inherent riskiness, lack of NAC consensus, and UN opposition?

7. Should we build language into the communique which would invite the Serbs to provide a "final" response by August 10 in order to give more time for Russian and Milosevic arm-twisting of Pale? Or do we treat their July 20 response as final? (Kozyrev had earlier proposed such a lag so Moscow would have more political cover to demonstrate the Serbs were being given every opportunity to come to their senses.)

8. If the Russians come up with an improved Bosnian Serb response but one which still falls short of unconditional acceptance, do we opt for negotiations as the lesser of two evils or firmly hold to our current line of unconditional acceptance or nothing?

Summary of Conclusions

Sanctions Issues

1. The U.S. should table an omnibus sanctions resolution in the UN Security Council encompassing sanctions tightening in the face of the Bosnian Serbs' rejection of the Contact Group proposal, sanctions easing in the event of Bosnian Serb acceptance of the Contact Group proposal, and sanctions easing in the context of acceptance by Milosevic of international monitors to verify a permanent cut-off of support for the Bosnian Serbs. This may be the most effective way of gaining Russian support for sanctions-tightening provisions. The draft will be shown first to the Russians and then to other Contact Group partners prior to tabling in New York. Action: OVP to prepare draft UNSC resolution by as soon as possible. (S)

PER E.O. 13526
LS 9/30/14 (1.25)

2. On sanctions tightening, we should press the British on the one serious issue unresolved in August 9 bilateral negotiations, blocking access to FRY funds even for humanitarian purposes. Action: OVP and State to coordinate demarches to the British. (S)

3. On sanctions easing in the context of a Bosnia settlement, the five-stage approach in the OVP memorandum of August 9 was reaffirmed. The U.S. will hold firm in linking the third stage of sanctions suspension (strategic trade sanctions) to a modus vivendi in the Krajina; if the Russians continue to object, we will be prepared to limit the UN Security Council resolution to the first two stages of sanctions suspension, but we will maintain our position on the Krajina linkage. On cooperation with the War Crimes Tribunal, we will not insist on an explicit linkage to any of the first four stages of sanctions easing, but make reintegration of Serbia into the world community (including IFI assistance) contingent upon progress with the Tribunal. Similarly, on compliance with all other relevant UNSC resolutions, we will include hortatory language but not draw any explicit linkages to the sanctions-easing program. (S)

4. On sanctions easing in response to a Milosevic cut-off of the Bosnian Serbs, international monitoring of the Serbian-Bosnian border is essential to verify Serbian performance, and sanctions relief can only be provided on that basis. The four-stage approach to sanctions easing in the OVP memorandum will be modified to raise the thresholds so that Milosevic would get no sanctions relief until the monitors were actually deployed. This revised plan will be integrated into the omnibus sanctions resolution cited above. Action: OVP and State to prepare revised sanctions-easing plan. (S)

Exclusion Zone Enforcement

5. Principals will continue to press their UK and other NATO counterparts on the need for further NATO air strikes in response to continuing Serb violations of the Sarajevo and Gorazde exclusion zones. Ambassador Albright will in parallel press the UN on the need for broader targeting of Serb assets than occurred on August 5 in response to future Serb violations. (S)

6. The U.S. should press for completion by the end of August of the planning for UNPROFOR redeployment/withdrawal that was agreed at the July 30 Contact Group Ministerial as the prerequisite to strict enforcement and extension of exclusion zones. That planning should include the option of redeployment to Sarajevo as well as withdrawal. Action: JCS to follow-up. (S)

Macedonia

7. Planning should be completed on a concept for expanding UNPROFOR/Macedonia, but a decision is not needed at this time. Action: IWG complete options paper for future PC meeting. (S)

Revision 1

ISSUE PAPER

UNPROFOR-MACEDONIA: STATUS QUO VS ENHANCEMENT

Decision for Principals

The Inter-agency Working Group proposes the Principals choose from among three options for UNPROFOR in the Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia:

I. Status Quo -- no change in numbers of troops, type & ratio of nationalities, or kinds and quantities of heavy weapons.

II. Increase only the U.S. Contingent -- substantial increase in numbers and heavy weapons (precise figures would depend on specific details of scenarios and attendant military planning-- beyond scope of this paper)

III. Multinational Increase -- substantial increase of both US and other nations' UNPROFOR troops, including Nordic, German and/or other contingents.

Mission

The mission outlined in the UN Secretary General's report of December 9, 1992 is arguably broad enough to apply to any one of the three options. It states:

"Its (UNPROFOR) objectives should be:
(a) To monitor the border areas and report to the Secretary-General, through the Force Commander, any developments which could pose a threat to Macedonia;
(b) By its presence, to deter such threats from any source, as well as help prevent clashes which could otherwise occur between external elements and Macedonian forces, thus helping to strengthen security and confidence in Macedonia."

I. Status Quo

Advantages:

- Uncontroversial: the UN, our Allies, and the US Congress are in broad agreement on the numbers and nationalities, Authority (Chapter VI), funding, Command and Control, and ROE.
- Minimizes expectations and obligations: not a security guarantee, no issue of diplomatic ties.
- Preserves primacy of multinational character: this is mainly a UN, not US activity.
- Fewer losses: less casualties caused by isolated incidents or terrorism.
- Easier to extract: either from massive Serb attack or in event of domestic chaos and collapse.

Disadvantages:

- Too small & light: cannot plausibly help prevent a wider Balkan war; if Serbs threaten, we have little alternative except to pull out, a limitation apparent to all parties; headlong evacuation suggests US retaliation unlikely.

- Confused perceptions: token character of US deployment confuses both the Gligorov government and the Milosevic regime as to the real purpose of our presence.

II. Increase only the US Contingent

Advantages:

- Serbia must reckon with UNPROFOR: intimidation or invasion of Macedonia would automatically involve confrontation with the US, i.e., UNPROFOR becomes a plausible deterrent at relatively low cost.
- Simplifies coordination: would necessitate concurrence of Nordic nations already there, and agreement with the UN on funding, but avoids delay inherent in seeking contributions from other nations.
- May win Boutros Ghali's support: the UN SYG, who would like to pull UNPROFOR out of Bosnia, is unlikely to support more UN peacekeepers in the Balkans, but probably would not resist "offer" from US (possibly except for funding arrangements).
- US control: our prerogative to have overall command of the operation uncontested.
- Complements Potential Bosnia OPS: strong presence on Macedonian/Serbia border would complicate Serb army planning in event massive US intervention in Bosnia becomes necessary to bring food to Sarajevo and other population centers in wake of lifting arms embargo.

Disadvantages:

- Costly backup support: must also consider financial and resource obligations in the increased stand-by air support for a "stand and fight" force.
- Implicit expectations & obligations:

(a) constitutes a virtual security guarantee to an unstable nation.
(b) expectation to lift arms embargo, equip and train FYROM armed forces.
(c) expectation to establish formal diplomatic relations.
(d) increased pressure for massive economic aid to Macedonia to avoid economic collapse

- Embroiled in domestic Macedonian unrest: severe domestic problems could lead to collapse of the Gligorov government -- UNPROFOR not police force, but departure could be seen as an open invitation for Serbia (and other neighbors) to intervene.
- Encourage Upheaval in Kosovo: could encourage Kosovars to stage revolt.
- E.O.13526 3.3(b)(6)

E.O.13526 3.3(b)(6)

- Sanctions enforcement: calls would increase for UNPROFOR role in sanctions enforcement which, if undertaken, would put them in direct confrontation with smugglers, offend the host government and bring about the final collapse of the economy.
- Funding: Peacekeeping operations receive funding from the UNGA based on size of the force authorized in the UNSC resolution; larger force requires new resolution. US Congress also likely to resist funding requests.
- Logistical problems: Bulgarian opposition parties vehemently opposed our modest reinforcement last April; E.O.13526 3.3(b)(6)
- UN Authority: Chapter VII authority, which requires a new UNSC resolution, may ultimately be needed. Retaining present authority is complicated by US legislation limiting deployment of US troops under Chapter VI peacekeeping operations to 1000 personnel worldwide.

III. Multinational Increase

Most of the advantages and disadvantages that obtain from increasing only the US contingent also apply to increasing all contingents in UNPROFOR-Macedonia. The following focuses on other considerations.

Advantages:

- International Policy of Containment: would mark a major step toward multinational containment of "spillover" in the Balkans.
- Preserves "European" character of problem: demonstrates US willingness to assist European nations in addressing their security problems in the post Cold War era.
- Enhances prospect of burden sharing: total burden obviously shared more equitably, but might also strengthen argument for UN funding.
- FRG Coming Out Party: German role in European peacekeeping must reflect its political and economic status; qualms about WW-II legacy offset by Russian peacekeeping role in Bosnia and by Macedonia's comparatively less central historical role.
- Retaining Involvement of Others: Nordic and German participation could be augmented by troops from other nations, or supplanted, if their participation is too problematic. If UNPROFOR vacates Bosnia in the wake of lifting the arms embargo, British, French, Russian and other UNPROFOR participants could contribute to a regional Containment strategy, beginning in Macedonia.

Disadvantages:

- Bosnia: could be misconstrued as "abandoning" Bosnia.
- Complicates Exit Strategy: our Exit Strategy would have to take into account the intentions of other national contingents.
- German elections: no chance Kohl will discuss this proposal until after the October 16 elections. Participation highly unlikely if SPD wins election.

DECL:OADR

MEASURES TO ENHANCE MACEDONIAN STABILITY

In considering steps we could take to further both long- and short-term policy objectives for bolstering The Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, our primary goal is to reduce the risk of further instability in the Balkans, including the possibility of a wider war. In our attempts to facilitate Greece/FYROM negotiations, our ability to influence either side to settle the dispute is limited. Both countries' positions are dictated by internal politics over which we have no influence. Additionally, we have little practical leverage on Greece to get it to lift its embargo or settle the FYROM name issue responsibly, and we have few resources to offer the FYROM to alleviate its current economic difficulties.

President Gligorov has dominated FYROM politics since his election in 1991. He is a moderating force in the FYROM and to date has been personally responsible for keeping peace and stability in the FYROM in the face of mounting external and internal pressures. This fall he faces elections under extremely difficult conditions. The convergence of rapidly deteriorating economic conditions and rising international pressure on the FYROM to plug its sanctions leaks may stir popular unrest that could be exploited by the extreme nationalist opposition. Greece's embargo on the FYROM is contributing heavily to its economic implosion, with losses reaching at least $200 million.

Within the limits of existing restraints, there are some steps we could take that would bolster the FYROM's position. A relatively modest infusion of assistance now may well turn out to be critical to this effort. We should not wait until after a genuine crisis erupts to act. We must also strive to balance steps to achieve regional stability with domestic concern that we not undermine our relationship with Greece.

Short-term Objectives and Steps

Diplomatic Support

Both the U.S. and the FYROM have reaped positive results from the recent visits of Secretary of Defense Perry and Under Secretary Davis to Skopje. Gligorv's August 10 meeting with the Vice President offers another opportunity to send a strong signal of support. We should continue to seek more such high-level contacts between our countries.

Lift Greek Embargo

One of our immediate goals should be the lifting of the

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY
DECLASSIFIED PER E.O. 13526
NLC 2/6/2020 (S.40)

embargo unilaterally imposed by Greece last February. Getting the embargo lifted would relieve rising tension over layoffs in the FYROM's heavy industry sector. Removing the embargo would also facilitate our efforts to tighten sanctions on Serbia and eliminate a major source of tension and instability. To require the FYROM to enforce the sanctions more strictly, while the Greece/FYROM border remains closed, would critically destabilize the country and the region.

Recognizing that no single message will sway the Greeks, a constant stream of demarches from us and from willing EU partners may eventually have some effect, although the Greeks will expect to receive a gesture from Skopje in return. One or more calls from the President to Papandreou during this period would help emphasize the seriousness with which the USG views the issue. We should urge other EU members to make similar demarches. In the final analysis, Papandreou is likely to make any decision on lifting the embargo on the basis of domestic political calculations. Nonetheless, actively pressing will in itself reassure Skopje that we are looking after its interests. In the fall as Macedonian elections approach, we should seek opportunities to quietly discuss with Gligorov, through Special Envoy Matthew Nimetz, what gesture the FYROM could make in order to facilitate lifting the embargo.

Sanctions Enforcement and Immediate Assistance

In the past, when we have pressed for stricter sanctions enforcement, FYROM leaders have said they could stop the leaks if the Greek embargo were lifted or if some compensation were forthcoming. Thus, if the U.S. could offer immediate tangible economic assistance to at least partially offset the strain of tightening sanctions with the Greek embargo still on, we would strengthen the GOFYROM's political will and ability to take such a step.

The Macedonians have indicated to our Skopje Liaison Office (USLO) that two types of immediate assistance would help the FYROM stave off economic disaster: adequate oil supplies for the winter, and financial support for its failing social security and unemployment fund. If the Greeks cannot be convinced to lift the embargo, they should be pressed to allow rail shipment of petroleum on humanitarian grounds. We could tell Gligorov that we will talk to the GOG about this. USLO Skopje estimates that additional social security assistance would amount to $4.1 million per month. A relatively small contribution of $10-$15 million would counter the impact of rapidly increasing embargo/sanctions-related unemployment, and would buy 3-4 months of time while we press for a solution later this fall. While we naturally would prefer channelling assistance into job-creation activities, the impact may be too long-term and not adequate to address the immediate economic and social pressures undermining Macedonian stability. We should identify undisbursed ESF funds and consider reallocating them to the FYROM to help with job creation, the social safety net, or a mix of the two.

Activating the IFI's

Another immediate step that would stimulate an influx of badly needed funds into the FYROM would be to press the World Bank and IMF at senior levels to underscore the priority we place on the FYROM's economic survival (EU balance-of-payments support, which is important in moving these IFI programs forward, has been blocked by Greece). The Bank and IMF need to hear this forcefully from us at a very high level. Despite reasonable efforts toward macro-economic stabilization, negotiations for the FYROM's IMF Stand-By Arrangement and $60 million World Bank Adjustment Loan could well be difficult, especially in light of upcoming elections. Under current circumstances, structural reform may have to be undertaken slowly, if not postponed entirely, until the embargo is lifted. EB believes that IFIs cannot be expected to prop up economies suffering from external political factors. The IFIs need to consider the arguments for flexibility and must avoid getting mired in election politics; fundamental adjustment principles cannot be abandoned.

Energize East-West Infrastructure Projects

We should also move quickly to lessen the FYROM's dependency on Serbia for trade and transportation routes by energizing the rapid development of planned East-West road/rail links with Albania and Bulgaria. In the short term this could be initiated by providing a transport advisor to Skopje and funding expansion of the border crossing at Novo Selo in the south, to speed transport and processing of winter oil imports. Currently, tanker trucks carrying the FYROM's oil imports experience long and costly delays as they traverse mountain roads and queue up at overcrowded customs facilities. As an immediate sign of support, our thinly-staffed USAID mission in Skopje could be expanded to accelerate lagging disbursement of funds for current SEED programs.

Serbia Corridor

While the Greek embargo remains in place, we should reconsider our opposition to strictly-controlled transshipments of critical imports through Serbia. The FYROM's heavy industry sector is being devastated as a result of import starvation, or through high cost alternate transport routes. This would offer some help on the employment -- as well as the political -- front, by keeping factories in operation. The "Balkan Beltway" infrastructure projects now underway can only offer partial relief. The corridor idea should be negotiated in exchange for much stricter sanctions compliance. Serbian cooperation would be necessary, but this could perhaps be handled in the context of any loosening that might flow from verified Serb efforts to seal the Bosnia/Serbia border. EB and the Sanctions Task Force object to the idea of reconsidering this corridor proposal and believe that developing alternate routes is the appropriate way to address these transport problems. We should not advocate easing the way the sanctions are applied, or granting some countries "exceptions." Were we to allow an exception for the FYROM, we would immediately face intense pressure from Bulgaria, Romania and others. Sanctions enforcement would be seriously compromised and the current Contact Group initiative would be undercut.

Full Diplomatic Relations

Establishing full diplomatic relations with the FYROM at this time remains the most significant sign of support the FYROM seeks in the face of its neighbors' doubts about its viability. As important as establishing relations is, there is little point in taking that step unless it will produce a net gain for us in the region. If the Greece/FYROM negotiations break down without resolving their outstanding differences, we will need to carefully consider whether the risks of not establishing relations outweigh Greece's probable negative reaction. We have already told Greece we cannot wait indefinitely to establish relations with Skopje. If the dispute drags on, a strong argument can be made that Greece's long-term interest in regional stability will be served by such a U.S. move.

Increase Military Presence

We should also consider whether increasing the presence of UNPROFOR troops in the FYROM would further our goal of bringing peace to Bosnia, or whether such a move would create more problems in the region. If the purpose of increasing the force would be to seal the border with Serbia, UNPROFOR's mandate would have to be revised by the Security Council. The UNSC may not agree to expand UNPROFOR at this point, given the UNSYG's inclination to shut it down. The Serb invasion in the current context is considered unlikely. Merely increasing the size of the force will not necessarily enhance its self-defense capabilities or its deterrent effect. We would have to consider whether putting more troops in the FYROM may encourage an uprising or exodus from Kosovo. Given Milosevic's new willingness to apply pressure to the Bosnian Serbs, such a move may send the wrong signal to Belgrade.

Military Assistance/Mil-to-Mil Ties

We should move forward with planned military assistance programs (such as a $125,000 FY 95 IMET program) and Secretary of Defense Perry's proposal for a Bilateral Working Group. Expanding military ties with the nascent FYROM army and increasing U.S. military assistance would allow us to influence the positive development of the Macedonian armed forces.

Congressional Reaction

Any or all of the above carrots for the FYROM could provoke significant opposition in Congress if they do not form part of an overall settlement of the Greece-FYROM dispute. Some Members, notably Senator Sarbanes, may strongly oppose any additional assistance to FYROM unless it is tied to concessions from Skopje in the negotiations. While reinforcing modestly the U.S. contingent in the UNPROFOR force in the FYROM would be problematic in the Congress, careful consultations in advance, especially by DOD and especially with the Republican leadership, could secure adequate bipartisan support.

Long-term Objectives and Steps

Economic Long-Term Measures

Our long-term policy in the FYROM and the southern Balkans should seek to solidify economic ties between Greece and its less-developed neighbors and to expand and complete embryonic East-West trade routes. In the long term, the FYROM can become a major hub in the regional transport net, at the confluence of East-West and (when reopened) North-South routes. Lessening dependence on Serbia for trade and trade routes will counteract Serbia's ability to use its monopoly on current trade routes as a destabilizing foreign policy tool. In the FYROM, continuing the processes of privatization, transition to a market economy and reforming the tax system and social safety net should be carried out by significantly expanding the SEED program and by assuring IFIs meaningful contributions to the FYROM's development.

Trends in Violations of the Sarajevo and Gorazde Cease-Fire Agreements and Heavy-Weapon Exclusion Zones
(Information Current as of 1500, 3 August 1994)

Summary

The security situation in Sarajevo and Gorazde has deteriorated since the Bosnian Serb rejection of the Contact Group peace proposal.

-- 1.4c the number of reported cease-fire violations is at its highest level in months; in Gorazde, there was a high of 180 on 26 July, and in Sarajevo there were over 700 on 2 August--up from an average of 100 to 200 for the last several months.

-- Small-arms and machine-gun fire accounts for almost all of the cease-fire violations that occur in the Sarajevo and Gorazde heavy-weapon exclusion zones. The level of reported heavy-weapons fire remains very low and is not comparable to the level of fire prior to implementation of the exclusion zones.

-- Bosnian Serb forces are renewing their challenge to UN control over the Sarajevo heavy-weapon exclusion zone--they reportedly tried on 2 August to recover weapons stored at UN collection points--and have continuously flouted UN authority in the Gorazde exclusion zones.

-- Both Bosnian Serb and Government forces have restricted UN personnel freedom of movement in the Sarajevo and Gorazde areas. 3.5c

Bosnian Serb actions seem intended to remind the Contact Group that it needs Serb cooperation to control the exclusion zones, that a decision to create additional exclusion zones without Serb concurrence would be resisted, and that there is a price to be paid for implementing the other "sticks" in the Contact Group plan. The Bosnian Serb actions also come at a time when they are very frustrated by Bosnian Government failure to agree to prisoner exchanges, as well as Government offensive operations, despite the Bosnia-wide cease-fire agreement that went into effect on 10 June. 3.5c

The Sarajevo and Gorazde Heavy-Weapon Exclusion Zones

The Sarajevo heavy-weapon exclusion zone was created by a Northern Atlantic Council (NAC) decision on 9 February. The decision gave Bosnian Serb and Government forces 10 days to withdraw or place under UNPROFOR control all weapons larger than 12.7mm (e.g. tanks, artillery pieces, mortars, multiple rocket launchers, missiles, and anti-aircraft weapons) within 20 kilometers of the center of Sarajevo, excluding an area within two kilometers of Pale; the decision stipulated, moreover, that any heavy weapons within the exclusion zone and not under UN control would be subject to NATO airstrikes. Nine collection sites are situated throughout the 20-kilometer exclusion zone and the UN currently controls or supervises over 300 Serb and about 50 Muslim heavy weapons in the Sarajevo area. The NAC decision also decreed that all UN and relief personnel in Bosnia should have free access to Sarajevo. 3.5c

The Gorazde heavy-weapon exclusion zone went into effect on 24 April 1994. A 22 April NAC decision gave the Bosnian Serbs until 0100 on 24 April to cease attacks on Gorazde, withdraw their forces three kilometers from the city center, and allow UN forces, humanitarian relief convoys, and medical assistance teams free access to the city. CINCSouth was authorized to conduct airstrikes against Serb heavy weapons within 20 kilometers of Gorazde city center, provided they were inside Bosnian territory. The NAC decision also called on the Bosnian Government not to undertake offensive military action from within the safe area of Gorazde. 3.5c

Sarajevo

Small-arms fire and sporadic shelling have been reported within the Sarajevo 20-kilometer zone since the NATO ultimatum in mid-February. These incidents, which averaged between 100 and 200 per day over the last few months (see table), have rapidly escalated in the last two weeks.

-- 1.4c 706 cease-fire violations on 2 August, 578 violations on 1 August, and 580 on 31 July. Small-arms and machine-gun fire accounts for almost all of the violations.

-- Both warring factions have violated the Sarajevo cease-fire agreement over the past week, with increased sniping and several significant clashes reported in the Grbavica area. 1.4c heavy sniper fire forced the city's tram lines to close on 29 July after six passengers were wounded by snipers.

-- The UN closed Sarajevo airport on 22 July after five UN aircraft were hit by small-arms fire, according to press reports. Secretary of Defense Perry's scheduled visit to Sarajevo on 22 July was canceled as a result of these actions. 1.4c Aircraft landing at Sarajevo airport occasionally have come under small-arms fire since April.

-- After a lull following the establishment of the Sarajevo exclusion zone, small-arms fire broke out within the city center shortly after the NATO airstrikes in Gorazde in April and remains a daily concern. On 9 May, 1.4c the first report of tank fire since the mid-February ultimatum, and a UN observer was killed in a mortar attack--probably by Serb forces--within the zone on 12 May,

-- 1.4c, 3.5c

The Bosnian Serbs have been challenging UN control of the Sarajevo heavy-weapon exclusion zone since the NATO airstrikes in Gorazde in April, probably as a means of testing UN resolve to maintain control of the zone and demonstrating Serb freedom of action. The Serbs have the capability to take the weapons against UNPROFOR resistance should they choose to do so.

-- 1.4c

Bosnian Serb forces attempted to retrieve weapons from one of the sites but were turned away by UN troops. UNPROFOR Bosnia Commander Rose stated publicly on 3 August that force would be used to prevent the Serbs from recovering weapons.

-- 1.4c Bosnian Serb forces disassembled and removed a 20mm anti-aircraft gun from the Ilidza collection site in late July.

In the weeks following the airstrikes at Gorazde, Serb forces removed--and reportedly have not returned--about 20 heavy weapons and some ammunition from various collection sites throughout the zone.

-- 1.4c

Serb forces were maintaining weapons at some collection sites, possibly in preparation for pulling the weapons out in case the situation deteriorates further. 1.4c, 3.5c

Bosnian Government forces also have reneged on some of their commitments around Sarajevo. UNPROFOR claims that Bosnian Government forces have violated the August 1993 agreement demilitarizing the Mt. Igman area. 1.4c

-- In early May, 1.4c six or seven heavy-weapons positions on Mt. Igman and preparations under way for more weapons positions.

-- 1.4c, 3.5c

Gorazde

The Bosnian Serbs have violated both the three-kilometer military withdrawal zone or the 20-kilometer heavy-weapon exclusion zone established around Gorazde in April.

-- Incidents of small-arms and machine-gun fire in Gorazde prior to the Contact Group ministerial last weekend peaked at 180 on 26 July, according to press 1.4c The level of violations has tapered off in recent days to 70-80 violations, but remains higher than before the announcement of the Bosnian Serb rejection of the Contact Group proposal.

-- 1.4c

-- 1.4c On the night of 24 July, Serb forces turned a 40mm anti-aircraft gun inside the exclusion zone on Muslim civilians harvesting crops, according to press reports. Negotiations for the removal of this weapon are under way. The next day, Serb forces fired an 82mm mortar from within the zone at Bosnian Government positions, according to a UN spokesman. Bosnian Serb troops also fired on UN observation positions in the enclave.

-- The Bosnian Serbs have never complied fully with the Gorazde 20-kilometer exclusion zone, withdrawing weapons only after UN observers discovered them. In mid-May, the UN Commander in Gorazde stated that the Serbs probably were hiding other weapons in areas they had declared off-limits to UN observers. Bosnian Government forces have harassed Serb troops in the Gorazde area. 3.5c

Freedom of Movement

Bosnian Serb forces have denied UN and relief personnel, as well as civilians, freedom of movement in the Sarajevo and Gorazde areas. Increased harassment of UN and relief personnel appears to coincide with international attempts to pressure the Bosnian Serbs into compliance with ultimatums.

-- Bosnian Serb leader Karadzic announced on 26 July that he could no longer guarantee the safety of traffic on two UN monitored routes; he claimed that the routes were being used by the Bosnian Government to smuggle arms. The next day, Bosnian Serb forces attacked a UN resupply convoy on one of these routes outside Sarajevo--killing a British UN soldier--and later fired on a French contingent attempting to recover the vehicles. Serbs also fired on Federation President Zubak's motorcade returning to the city, according to press 1.4c

-- Bosnian Serb forces have at various times restricted and blocked movement in and around Sarajevo; for a time shortly after the NATO airstrikes around Gorazde in April, they placed all UN personnel in Serb-held territory under virtual house arrest. The Serbs temporarily mined the perimeters of several weapons collection sites and detained UN personnel supervising Serb weapons in the exclusion zone.

-- Bosnian Serb forces now close convoy checkpoints enroute to Gorazde from Friday to Monday each week and employ other delaying tactics. On 26 July, Bosnian Serb officials detained a UNHCR official on his way to Gorazde. Serb authorities recently denied entry for a water specialist and confiscated part of a convoy shipment, including rat poison needed to control the growing rat population of Gorazde that has led to a possible outbreak of hemorrhagic fever.

Violations of the Sarajevo and Gorazde Cease-Fire Agreements and Heavy-Weapon Exclusion Zones: An Update
(Information Current as of 0900, 4 August)

Small-arms fire and explosions continued in Sarajevo overnight, and Gorazde remains unstable.

-- Sniping continues in Sarajevo despite a Tuesday agreement between the warring parties to end this form of harassment of civilians, according to press reports. French, Russian, and Ukrainian UNPROFOR contingents have placed armored vehicles near the Holiday Inn to discourage snipers.

-- The Bosnian Serbs also continue to challenge UN control of the Sarajevo heavy-weapon exclusion zone. 1.4c [redacted] Recently, Bosnian Serb forces twice have attempted to remove mortars from the Poljine weapons collection point but were turned away by French UNPROFOR troops, [redacted] Yesterday, the Bosnian Serb forces placed mines around the compound after the French again intervened, but after two hours of negotiations the mines were removed and the Serbs withdrew.

-- 1.4c [redacted] the home-made heavy rocket fired at Visoko on 2 August--probably from within the Sarajevo heavy-weapon exclusion zone--was of a type previously used by Bosnian Serb forces.

-- Cease-fire violations continue at high levels and 1.4c [redacted] an increasing number of explosions in and around the city. 3.5c

The recent events are typical of the steadily deteriorating security situation around Gorazde and Sarajevo over the last month.

KRAJINA STRATEGY

A settlement in the Krajina is an essential piece in the Balkan puzzle. With the lifting of the arms embargo and broadened fighting in Bosnia a real possibility, our immediate goal with respect to Krajina must be to secure the Croatian flank and avoid spillover from Bosnia. In this regard, securing a renewal of UNPROFOR's mandate in Croatia, when it expires on September 30, will be a key first step. The force plays a stabilizing role and we should work to keep it in Croatia even if UNPROFOR withdraws from Bosnia proper because of the lifting of the embargo.

Keeping Krajina-Sanctions Linkage

One way to ensure that Tudjman agrees to extend the UNPROFOR mandate is to hold firm to our sanctions linkages to Krajina, while making clear that our new partnership requires Croatian cooperation and restraint even as we move toward lifting the embargo. Moscow continues to oppose any linkage, however, and this poses a major obstacle. But it does recognize the importance of resolving Krajina, argues that modus vivendi issues will be resolved "early", and says Milosevic is firmly on notice that the Krajina talks process which resumed August 5 must produce results. If Moscow continues with this approach, our only recourse may be to insist that the intended results of linkage -- modus vivendi and mutual recognition -- be achieved up front. Arguably, this should be easier for Milosevic now that he has bitten the bullet and broken with Pale.

Cautioning Tudjman

At the same time, we will also need to be very direct with Tudjman in cautioning him not to take advantage of events in Bosnia by seeking to force the pace of events on Krajina -- a course which could easily spin out of control. We must emphasize in no uncertain terms that the departure of UNPROFOR and new fighting in Krajina would lead to a renewed and much more dangerous conflict between Serbia and Croatia -- a conflict in which Croatia would likely take a shellacking. Tudjman should be under no illusion about continued U.S. diplomatic and financial support should he choose the route of renewed conflict.

Keeping the Krajina Talks Alive

In parallel, we should seek to contain the situation by doing what we can to keep the Krajina negotiating process alive and to demonstrate that negotiations can produce a settlement acceptable to Croatia. Working within the current, informal negotiating framework set up last March (which brought together ICFY negotiators Ahrens and Eide, with Ambassador Galbraith and Russian Ambassador Kerestedianc), we should help accelerate efforts to develop a framework accord. In this regard, a July exchange of notes between Zagreb and Belgrade on furthering their dialogue and reaffirming their interest in economic confidence-building measures was a helpful building block. So also was the August 5 meeting between the Croats and Krajina Serbs. While accomplishing nothing specific, it did end the four-month hiatus in talks and produce agreement for a further meeting.

And Pushing them Forward

In the context of Milosevic's break with Pale and (hopefully) continued Russian pressure for progress on a modus vivendi, there could in fact be some new possibilities for moving forward on this track. Milosevic's endorsement of the Contact Group plan -- which implicitly includes concepts such as mutual recognition, recognition of existing borders, abandoning the idea (at least for now) of a Greater Serbia, and granting a relationship for Serbs with Belgrade -- lays important groundwork for similar concepts for resolving Krajina. In this regard, the ad hoc group has scheduled a meeting in late August to put together a confidence-building measures package as well as principles for a political settlement. We should help take the lead in driving that process forward, be prepared to provide constitutional experts to help with constitutional language, and aim to have specific proposals ready by the middle of September.

Developing a Confidence-Building Measures/Incentives Package

Among the confidence-building measures likely to be included in an economic reintegration package are the reopening of road, rail, river, and air links; the restoration of energy and water facilities and supplies; the resumption of commercial trade activities; the restoration of post and telecommunications links; and the cessation of extraction and removal of oil and other natural resources from Sector East and other UNPAs without permission of the Croatian government.

If necessary, we could also follow the Bosnia precedent and develop an incentives and disincentives package to motivate the parties to accept the proposals. While Croatia is anxious to finalize an agreement, the Krajina Serbs are not. Milosevic remains the key to delivering the Krajina Serbs. There is good reason to believe he would be prepared to press forward with a Krajina settlement once a Bosnia settlement has been reached, particularly if credible sanctions remain linked to Krajina, as both we and the EU propose.

KRAJINA STRATEGY

A settlement in the Krajina is an essential piece in the Balkan puzzle. With the lifting of the arms embargo and broadened fighting in Bosnia a real possibility, our immediate goal with respect to Krajina must be to secure the Croatian flank and avoid spillover from Bosnia. In this regard, securing a renewal of UNPROFOR's mandate in Croatia, when it expires on September 30, will be a key first step. The force plays a stabilizing role and we should work to keep it in Croatia even if UNPROFOR withdraws from Bosnia proper because of the lifting of the embargo.

Keeping Krajina-Sanctions Linkage

One way to ensure that Tudjman agrees to extend the UNPROFOR mandate is to hold firm to our sanctions linkages to Krajina, while making clear that our new partnership requires Croatian cooperation and restraint even as we move toward lifting the embargo. Moscow continues to oppose any linkage, however, and this poses a major obstacle. But it does recognize the importance of resolving Krajina, argues that modus vivendi issues will be resolved "early", and says Milosevic is firmly on notice that the Krajina talks process which resumed August 5 must produce results. If Moscow continues with this approach, our only recourse may be to insist that the intended results of linkage -- modus vivendi and mutual recognition -- be achieved up front. Arguably, this should be easier for Milosevic now that he has bitten the bullet and broken with Pale.

Cautioning Tudjman

At the same time, we will also need to be very direct with Tudjman in cautioning him not to take advantage of events in Bosnia by seeking to force the pace of events on Krajina -- a course which could easily spin out of control. We must emphasize in no uncertain terms that the departure of UNPROFOR and new fighting in Krajina would lead to a renewed and much more dangerous conflict between Serbia and Croatia -- a conflict in which Croatia would likely take a shellacking. Tudjman should be under no illusion about continued U.S. diplomatic and financial support should he choose the route of renewed conflict.

Keeping the Krajina Talks Alive

In parallel, we should seek to contain the situation by doing what we can to keep the Krajina negotiating process alive and to demonstrate that negotiations can produce a settlement acceptable to Croatia. Working within the current, informal negotiating framework set up last March (which brought together ICFY negotiators Ahrens and Eide, with Ambassador Galbraith and Russian Ambassador Kerestedianc), we should help accelerate efforts to develop a framework accord. In this regard, a July exchange of notes between Zagreb and Belgrade on furthering their dialogue and reaffirming their interest in economic confidence-building measures was a helpful building block. So also was the August 5 meeting between the Croats and Krajina Serbs. While accomplishing nothing specific, it did end the four-month hiatus in talks and produce agreement for a further meeting.

And Pushing them Forward

In the context of Milosevic's break with Pale and (hopefully) continued Russian pressure for progress on a modus vivendi, there could in fact be some new possibilities for moving forward on this track. Milosevic's endorsement of the Contact Group plan -- which implicitly includes concepts such as mutual recognition, recognition of existing borders, abandoning the idea (at least for now) of a Greater Serbia, and granting a relationship for Serbs with Belgrade -- lays important groundwork for similar concepts for resolving Krajina. In this regard, the ad hoc group has scheduled a meeting in late August to put together a confidence-building measures package as well as principles for a political settlement. We should help take the lead in driving that process forward, be prepared to provide constitutional experts to help with constitutional language, and aim to have specific proposals ready by the middle of September.

Developing a Confidence-Building Measures/Incentives Package

Among the confidence-building measures likely to be included in an economic reintegration package are the reopening of road, rail, river, and air links; the restoration of energy and water facilities and supplies; the resumption of commercial trade activities; the restoration of post and telecommunications links; and the cessation of extraction and removal of oil and other natural resources from Sector East and other UNPAs without permission of the Croatian government.

If necessary, we could also follow the Bosnia precedent and develop an incentives and disincentives package to motivate the parties to accept the proposals. While Croatia is anxious to finalize an agreement, the Krajina Serbs are not. Milosevic remains the key to delivering the Krajina Serbs. There is good reason to believe he would be prepared to press forward with a Krajina settlement once a Bosnia settlement has been reached, particularly if credible sanctions remain linked to Krajina, as both we and the EU propose.

MEASURES TO ENHANCE MACEDONIAN STABILITY

In considering steps we could take to further both long- and short-term policy objectives for bolstering The Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, our primary goal is to reduce the risk of further instability in the Balkans, including the possibility of a wider war. In our attempts to facilitate Greece/FYROM negotiations, our ability to influence either side to settle the dispute is limited. Both countries' positions are dictated by internal politics over which we have no influence. Additionally, we have little practical leverage on Greece to get it to lift its embargo or settle the FYROM name issue responsibly, and we have few resources to offer the FYROM to alleviate its current economic difficulties.

President Gligorov has dominated FYROM politics since his election in 1991. He is a moderating force in the FYROM and to date has been personally responsible for keeping peace and stability in the FYROM in the face of mounting external and internal pressures. This fall he faces elections under extremely difficult conditions. The convergence of rapidly deteriorating economic conditions and rising international pressure on the FYROM to plug its sanctions leaks may stir popular unrest that could be exploited by the extreme nationalist opposition. Greece's embargo on the FYROM is contributing heavily to its economic implosion, with losses reaching at least $200 million.

Within the limits of existing restraints, there are some steps we could take that would bolster the FYROM's position. A relatively modest infusion of assistance now may well turn out to be critical to this effort. We should not wait until after a genuine crisis erupts to act. We must also strive to balance steps to achieve regional stability with domestic concern that we not undermine our relationship with Greece.

Short-term Objectives and Steps

Diplomatic Support

Both the U.S. and the FYROM have reaped positive results from the recent visits of Secretary of Defense Perry and Under Secretary Davis to Skopje. Gligorv's August 10 meeting with the Vice President offers another opportunity to send a strong signal of support. We should continue to seek more such high-level contacts between our countries.

Lift Greek Embargo

One of our immediate goals should be the lifting of the

PER E.O. 13526

2013-0682-M

embargo unilaterally imposed by Greece last February. Getting the embargo lifted would relieve rising tension over layoffs in the FYROM's heavy industry sector. Removing the embargo would also facilitate our efforts to tighten sanctions on Serbia and eliminate a major source of tension and instability. To require the FYROM to enforce the sanctions more strictly, while the Greece/FYROM border remains closed, would critically destabilize the country and the region.

Recognizing that no single message will sway the Greeks, a constant stream of demarches from us and from willing EU partners may eventually have some effect, although the Greeks will expect to receive a gesture from Skopje in return. One or more calls from the President to Papandreou during this period would help emphasize the seriousness with which the USG views the issue. We should urge other EU members to make similar demarches. In the final analysis, Papandreou is likely to make any decision on lifting the embargo on the basis of domestic political calculations. Nonetheless, actively pressing will in itself reassure Skopje that we are looking after its interests. In the fall as Macedonian elections approach, we should seek opportunities to quietly discuss with Gligorov, through Special Envoy Matthew Nimetz, what gesture the FYROM could make in order to facilitate lifting the embargo.

Sanctions Enforcement and Immediate Assistance

In the past, when we have pressed for stricter sanctions enforcement, FYROM leaders have said they could stop the leaks if the Greek embargo were lifted or if some compensation were forthcoming. Thus, if the U.S. could offer immediate tangible economic assistance to at least partially offset the strain of tightening sanctions with the Greek embargo still on, we would strengthen the GOFYROM's political will and ability to take such a step.

The Macedonians have indicated to our Skopje Liaison Office (USLO) that two types of immediate assistance would help the FYROM stave off economic disaster: adequate oil supplies for the winter, and financial support for its failing social security and unemployment fund. If the Greeks cannot be convinced to lift the embargo, they should be pressed to allow rail shipment of petroleum on humanitarian grounds. We could tell Gligorov that we will talk to the GOG about this. USLO Skopje estimates that additional social security assistance would amount to $4.1 million per month. A relatively small contribution of $10-$15 million would counter the impact of rapidly increasing embargo/sanctions-related unemployment, and would buy 3-4 months of time while we press for a solution later this fall. While we naturally would prefer channelling assistance into job-creation activities, the impact may be too long-term and not adequate to address the immediate economic and social pressures undermining Macedonian stability. We should identify undisbursed ESF funds and consider reallocating them to the FYROM to help with job creation, the social safety net, or a mix of the two.

Activating the IFI's

Another immediate step that would stimulate an influx of badly needed funds into the FYROM would be to press the World Bank and IMF at senior levels to underscore the priority we place on the FYROM's economic survival (EU balance-of-payments support, which is important in moving these IFI programs forward, has been blocked by Greece). The Bank and IMF need to hear this forcefully from us at a very high level. Despite reasonable efforts toward macro-economic stabilization, negotiations for the FYROM's IMF Stand-By Arrangement and $60 million World Bank Adjustment Loan could well be difficult, especially in light of upcoming elections. Under current circumstances, structural reform may have to be undertaken slowly, if not postponed entirely, until the embargo is lifted. EB believes that IFIs cannot be expected to prop up economies suffering from external political factors. The IFIs need to consider the arguments for flexibility and must avoid getting mired in election politics; fundamental adjustment principles cannot be abandoned.

Energize East-West Infrastructure Projects

We should also move quickly to lessen the FYROM's dependency on Serbia for trade and transportation routes by energizing the rapid development of planned East-West road/rail links with Albania and Bulgaria. In the short term this could be initiated by providing a transport advisor to Skopje and funding expansion of the border crossing at Novo Selo in the south, to speed transport and processing of winter oil imports. Currently, tanker trucks carrying the FYROM's oil imports experience long and costly delays as they traverse mountain roads and queue up at overcrowded customs facilities. As an immediate sign of support, our thinly-staffed USAID mission in Skopje could be expanded to accelerate lagging disbursement of funds for current SEED programs.

Serbia Corridor

While the Greek embargo remains in place, we should reconsider our opposition to strictly-controlled transshipments of critical imports through Serbia. The FYROM's heavy industry sector is being devastated as a result of import starvation, or through high cost alternate transport routes. This would offer some help on the employment -- as well as the political -- front, by keeping factories in operation. The "Balkan Beltway" infrastructure projects now underway can only offer partial relief. The corridor idea should be negotiated in exchange for much stricter sanctions compliance. Serbian cooperation would be necessary, but this could perhaps be handled in the context of any loosening that might flow from verified Serb efforts to seal the Bosnia/Serbia border. EB and the Sanctions Task Force object to the idea of reconsidering this corridor proposal and believe that developing alternate routes is the appropriate way to address these transport problems. We should not advocate easing the way the sanctions are applied, or granting some countries "exceptions." Were we to allow an exception for the FYROM, we would immediately face intense pressure from Bulgaria, Romania and others. Sanctions enforcement would be seriously compromised and the current Contact Group initiative would be undercut.

Full Diplomatic Relations

Establishing full diplomatic relations with the FYROM at this time remains the most significant sign of support the FYROM seeks in the face of its neighbors' doubts about its viability. As important as establishing relations is, there is little point in taking that step unless it will produce a net gain for us in the region. If the Greece/FYROM negotiations break down without resolving their outstanding differences, we will need to carefully consider whether the risks of not establishing relations outweigh Greece's probable negative reaction. We have already told Greece we cannot wait indefinitely to establish relations with Skopje. If the dispute drags on, a strong argument can be made that Greece's long-term interest in regional stability will be served by such a U.S. move.

Increase Military Presence

We should also consider whether increasing the presence of UNPROFOR troops in the FYROM would further our goal of bringing peace to Bosnia, or whether such a move would create more problems in the region. If the purpose of increasing the force would be to seal the border with Serbia, UNPROFOR's mandate would have to be revised by the Security Council. The UNSC may not agree to expand UNPROFOR at this point, given the UNSYG's inclination to shut it down. The Serb invasion in the current context is considered unlikely. Merely increasing the size of the force will not necessarily enhance its self-defense capabilities or its deterrent effect. We would have to consider whether putting more troops in the FYROM may encourage an uprising or exodus from Kosovo. Given Milosevic's new willingness to apply pressure to the Bosnian Serbs, such a move may send the wrong signal to Belgrade.

Military Assistance/Mil-to-Mil Ties

We should move forward with planned military assistance programs (such as a $125,000 FY 95 IMET program) and Secretary of Defense Perry's proposal for a Bilateral Working Group. Expanding military ties with the nascent FYROM army and increasing U.S. military assistance would allow us to influence the positive development of the Macedonian armed forces.

Congressional Reaction

Any or all of the above carrots for the FYROM could provoke significant opposition in Congress if they do not form part of an overall settlement of the Greece-FYROM dispute. Some Members, notably Senator Sarbanes, may strongly oppose any additional assistance to FYROM unless it is tied to concessions from Skopje in the negotiations. While reinforcing modestly the U.S. contingent in the UNPROFOR force in the FYROM would be problematic in the Congress, careful consultations in advance, especially by DOD and especially with the Republican leadership, could secure adequate bipartisan support.

Long-term Objectives and Steps

Economic Long-Term Measures

Our long-term policy in the FYROM and the southern Balkans should seek to solidify economic ties between Greece and its less-developed neighbors and to expand and complete embryonic East-West trade routes. In the long term, the FYROM can become a major hub in the regional transport net, at the confluence of East-West and (when reopened) North-South routes. Lessening dependence on Serbia for trade and trade routes will counteract Serbia's ability to use its monopoly on current trade routes as a destabilizing foreign policy tool. In the FYROM, continuing the processes of privatization, transition to a market economy and reforming the tax system and social safety net should be carried out by significantly expanding the SEED program and by assuring IFIs meaningful contributions to the FYROM's development.

Summary of Conclusions

Sanctions:

1. The Principals agreed to continue to push for completion of the easing and tightening resolutions in New York and to continue to insist on Krajina linkage in the easing resolution. Secretary Christopher will consult with allies on options for moving forward with sanctions. (S)

2. Regarding Milosevic's closure of his border with Bosnian Serb territory, the Principals agreed that an effective international monitoring system was essential if the UNSC were to be able to determine whether to extend the delay in imposition of new sanctions or to take other sanctions measures in response to Serbian enforcement of the embargo. (C)

Lifting the Arms Embargo:

3. Principals agreed the goal in seeking a multilateral lifting of the arms embargo on the Federation is to provide the Bosnians with a defensive capability to ensure the inherent right of self-defense. A detailed planning document developing a concept of how arms might be provided, and including a range of options, should be developed within two weeks time. Action: OSD and JCS to develop comprehensive plan. (S)

4. The U.S. should be prepared to provide air support, but not ground troops, to the Bosnian government in connection with the arms embargo lifting in the likely event of increased Bosnian Serb military action against the Federation. Planning should focus on the development of robust air options, including the use of air power for tactical, punitive, deterrent, or other purposes. Planning should include options for responses to Bosnian Serb action against the eastern enclaves, Sarajevo, Tuzla, and elsewhere. Scenarios considered should include: 1) air options following complete UNPROFOR withdrawal, and 2) air strike options within the context of a remaining, reconfigured UNPROFOR presence following lift. Planning should assume action in the NATO context, or within a coalition of willing allies. Action: OSD and JCS. (S)

5. On the future of UNPROFOR, Principals agreed to review options for a new role for UNPROFOR. The options should include at a minimum, a defense of Sarajevo model, and a humanitarian aid escort mission through Federation territory. Once the options are developed and reviewed by the Principals, they will be presented to the allies. Action: OSD and JCS to develop options. (C)

6. The U.S. will seek multilateral support for the lifting of the arms embargo against the Bosnian government. NATO should remain engaged as we move toward a more robust use of air power. Action: State develop a paper outlining a diplomatic and Congressional strategy for achieving these objectives, including options for sustaining the negotiating track. (C)

The Eastern Mediterranean:

7. A Presidential emissary to both Greece and Turkey should deliver a strong message to each country warning that recent incidents, and the overall increase in Greek-Turkish military tensions, risk leading to serious erosion of U.S. support for both countries. The envoy's message should be specific, with sticks and carrots for each country. Action: State to draft concept and talking points. (S)

8. The new U.S. Special Coordinator for Cyprus should be identified and announced as soon as possible. It should be someone perceived by all sides as impartial. Action: State to recommend candidates. (C)

SECRET

9. On Macedonia, the previously tasked study of reinforcing UNPROFOR there should be completed, concurrent with the completion of the arms embargo lift paper. Further attention is required to economic assistance to Macedonia as well. Action: OSD and JCS to develop options for UNPROFOR-Macedonia reinforcement planning by end of August. State to develop options for increased economic assistance. (C)

2. The Eastern Mediterranean: A Region of Crisis

Introduction and Goals

Greece and Turkey are the focus of a region of crisis extending from the Balkans and Macedonia through the Middle East and into Central Asia. The overriding United States interest in this area is stability and the absence of conflict, especially involving Russia. Our general goals are thus: (1) the relaxation of interstate tensions and avoidance of armed conflict: (2) the development and refinement of democratic regimes that defuse ethnic conflict; (3) the implementation of economic reform to help sustain political and economic development; and (4) the development of regional political and economic cooperation.

Solutions to regional problems are particularly difficult because of the long-standing "zero-sum" nature of regional rivalries. Policies which benefit Turkey risk a downturn in relations with Greece, and vice-versa. The same holds true in any approach to Greece and Albania, the GOG and FYROM, Turkey and Russia, and Armenia and Turkey. Additional USG funding for economic purposes is one of the best ways to help regional states while minimizing "zero-sum" opposition from others, since it is less controversial than political or security support. But additional funding is difficult in a time of budgetary stringency.

Growing strains in Greco-Turk relations and in their relations with the United States threaten a wide range of U.S. interests throughout the region. The upsurge in long-term animosity is increasingly difficult to contain because there is no longer a tight framework of Western Cold War solidarity. The U.S. will have to make a major investment of effort and resources to have an appreciable effect on developments which stem from a major realignment of interests and preoccupations in the region. U.S. interests in Turkey are more extensive than in Greece or other regional nations, and we have elaborated on these interests in Annex A.

TURKEY

Turkey is caught in a web of political and economic problems. A weak coalition government is having difficulty coping with the simultaneous challenges of combatting the Kurdistan Worker's Party (PKK), meeting the needs of a poor and growing population, and reforming an inefficient economy. The deterioration in Turkey's human rights situation is undermining the integrity of its democratic system as well as becoming a serious problem in Ankara's relations with the U.S. and other Western countries. Meanwhile, the post-Cold War decline in Turkey's active military importance has diminished

Ankara's stock in the West. There has been an appreciable decline in aid levels, military cooperation, support for Turkish integration into the EU, understanding for Turkey's concerns about Russia, and willingness to help Turkey offset the cost of the Iraqi embargo.

Turkey nevertheless stands out as a democratic and secular nation in a region which has few democratic traditions, where Islamic fundamentalism is increasing, and where Christianity and Islam directly confront each other. A committed member of NATO, Turkey both strengthens Western defenses against the possibility of a resurgent Russian threat, and offers the potential to extend the reach of the West into an unstable part of the world which has critical oil resources. There is no doubt that an undemocratic, radical, destabilized, or fundamentalist Turkey would encourage forces in the region that are inimical to U.S. and Western interests.

Ankara is seeking to use improved relations with Israel to strengthen support in the U.S. and extend its influence in Central Asia. The Israeli government views democratic, secular Turkey as a counterweight to Iraq, Syria, Iran, and fundamentalism in general. Common cause between Tel Aviv and Ankara has some limited potential to move Middle Eastern and Central Asian developments in a positive direction.

Final agreement to flush the mothballed Iraqi pipeline has not yet been reached as Turkey is still working to obtain Iraq's agreement. The Turks continue to feel that their economic sacrifices to implement the UN sanctions against Iraq have gone largely unappreciated. This feeling reinforces popular sentiment that Turkey will never be accepted as a full-fledged member of the Western "club," and that Ankara must increasingly pursue its own interests without special deference to the West.

Near to Mid-Term Objectives

Over time, we seek an economically successful, secular and democratic state, with improved human rights performance, capable of acting as a bridge to countries further east, while remaining solidly rooted in the Western security system. In the shorter term, our goals with Turkey include (in priority order):

- An end to any bombing campaign (e.g., Rhodes) against Greece by the Government of Turkey (GOT);
- Continuation of Operation Provide Comfort and the maintenance of the regime of sanctions against Iraq;
- Cooperation in the amelioration of regional conflicts, including the Cyprus dispute, the war in Bosnia, and the conflict in Nagorno-Karabakh;

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

- Improved human rights performance, including an end to torture and restrictions on freedom of expression; and

- Continuation of the economic reform program enacted in April 1994.

Carrots

In the current political and fiscal environment, U.S. ability to secure these goals is limited. There is nevertheless a range of steps we can take. These are listed below by category, in order of ascending difficulty within each category.

I. Strengthen the USG-GOT dialogue: We have a number of important messages to send to the Government of Turkey on security, political and economic issues which will be difficult to deliver and to receive. They need to be made at the highest possible levels, and they need to be repeated. For this purpose, a series of high level visitors would be useful. If done properly, such visitors could serve the additional function of providing reassurance to the GOT that the USG remains committed to the relationship. Visits could include:

-- A Presidential envoy to warn Prime Minister Ciller of the serious danger to Turkey's Western ties posed by unilateral action against Greece, including covert action, to review our political agenda with Turkey and to reinforce the need for urgent human rights improvements. A senior military officer should accompany the envoy to convey these same considerations to the Turkish military. Possible emissaries include:

  - NSA Tony Lake
  - U/S Tarnoff

  Following the Presidential envoy, senior officials should periodically be used to reiterate the messages that were passed, both in order to maintain the dialogue and to keep the pressure on Ankara to move in a desirable direction. Discussions should also center on regional issues such as Nagorno-Karabakh, Central Asia, Iraq, Russia and the Middle East, in order to emphasize the importance the USG attaches to working with Turkey as an equal partner. Possible emissaries for this task include:

  - New EUR A/S Holbrooke
  - DRL A/S Shattuck
  - NSC Europe Director Vershbow
  - New EUR DAS Frasure.
  - Incoming Coordinator for Counter-Terrorism Wilcox.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Meanwhile, we should use every possible venue and occasion to reiterate and reinforce the messages that have been passed.

-- In addition to visits by USG officials to Turkey, there will be opportunities to use visits by GOT officials to the U.S. to pursue this high level dialogue:

  - o An early invitation should be extended to the new Turkish MFA Under secretary to visit Washington as soon as he is named, as part of an effort to revitalize the U.S.-Turkey Steering Group.

  - o The UNGA will bring the new Turkish Foreign Minister to New York and possibly to Washington. It would be appropriate for the Secretary to meet with him.

  - o The annual meeting of the U.S.-Turkey Joint Economic Commission will be held in Washington in November or December and will bring a number of senior Turkish economic officials.

II. Expand the dialogue to include key Western allies: While the U.S. has the strongest bilateral relationship with Turkey of any country, other Western nations (eg. UK, Germany, France) can also exercise influence on Turkey. It might be useful to initiate a major review of Turkish-Greek-Western relations with key allies with a view to coordinating long-term political and security policies.

III. Expand the dialogue to include key Middle Eastern countries: Key regional countries such as Israel, Saudi Arabia, and Kuwait have expressed concern over the strains in Turkey and would like to work with us to help alleviate them. It is in our interest to help establish closer ties between these countries and Turkey. We should involve them in our consultations on Turkey, encourage them to work with us in providing assistance to Turkey, and stimulate them to pursue parallel initiatives with Turkey.

IV. Strengthen material incentives to Turkey:

-- Establish a U.S.-Turkish commission to promote cooperative assistance to the Caucasus and Central Asia, and commit a portion of U.S. assistance destined for Central Asia to a tripartite program involving Turkey in such areas as the provision of medical services.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

-- Increase Turkey's duty-free access to the U.S. market, by agreeing to the GOT's request to add specific categories of articles not currently covered under the GSP list.

-- Establish and generously fund a special office in the Commerce Department to promote U.S.-Turkish trade, and create a special interagency committee chaired by the Secretary of Commerce to promote U.S. trade with Turkey (and perhaps other Big Emerging Markets).

-- Organize a USG-GOG trade mission to the Balkans led by Commerce Secretary Brown or Deputy Commerce Secretary Barram.

-- Keep open the possibility of creating a loan guarantee program for Turkey should Turkish interest rekindle.

-- Make best efforts to remove the Congressional hold on FY'94 ESF and to provide additional ESF directed to use in the Turkish southeast, contingent on GOT steps toward a political resolution of the Kurdish problem.

-- Provide funding for cooperative human-rights projects, such as the operation of a "blue-ribbon committee" of senior statesmen to examine Turkey's human rights performance and make appropriate recommendations.

-- Seek additional assistance which could be offered contingent on Turkish-Greek agreement on concrete measures of cooperation, e.g., military debt reduction (for both Turkey and Greece) in exchange for confidence-building measures, including a reduction of military activity, in the Aegean.

-- Seek special bilateral assistance (perhaps $50-100 million grant) to support Turkey's contribution to Provide Comfort.

V. Respond to outstanding Turkish concerns:

-- Assure that USG action on outstanding bilateral economic problems such as Section 301 trade reviews and IIAA petition to remove Turkey from GSP is as favorable to Turkey as possible.

-- Grant Turkey's recent request for swing in several quota categories under the bilateral textile agreement.

-- Reverse DS's decision to draw down personal security for the Turkish Consul General in Los Angeles ($800,000 cost).

-- Ensure that survivors of Turks killed in the downing of the two U.S. helicopters receive adequate compensation.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

-- Impress our European allies with the terrorist nature of the PKK, and encourage them to close down offices with demonstrated PKK affiliations in their countries.

-- Continue pressing the government of Greece to take action against PKK activities.

VI. Strengthen Congressional support for relations with Turkey:

-- Encourage visits to Turkey by Members of Congress, especially those particularly concerned with human rights. Visits might also include Provide Comfort operations, and could be conducted jointly with Turkish parliamentarians.

-- Intensify cooperation with Members of Congress who are supportive of Turkey.

-- Press the case for strong U.S. interests in Turkey with Members of Congress who are hostile to Turkey.

-- Encourage the GOT to take Congressional concerns more seriously, and to devote more attention to Congress, such as by sending senior Turkish statesmen to Washington to meet with Members of Congress.

VII. Increase Military Cooperation:

-- Promote PFP and other peacekeeping exercises in Turkey or involving Turkish troops, including help with planning, the provision of special funding, and pressure on key allies and on the Russians to participate.

-- Conclude the "Arrangement for Transfer" of the Turkish Defense Fund expeditiously and encourage the GOT to conclude the DECA review.

-- Support a Turkish proposal for an interim tanker capability, pending arrival of refurbished tankers in 1997, provided the MOD signs the letter of offer and acceptance for a specific number of refurbished tankers and uses the interim tankers to reduce U.S. operational commitments.

-- Urge the TGS to commit to joint training activities and to pursue common military doctrine.

-- Maintain high levels of security assistance loan credits, if at all possible at preferential rates, and IMET funding.

Sticks

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

regime against Iraq would justify a resort to stronger measures to change GOT policies. A harder GOT line on Cyprus, in the Balkans or Nagorno-Karabakh also might require a sharper response from us. In such circumstances, the following measures are at our disposal:

-- Suspend allocation of preferential textile quotas.

-- Block any NATO infrastructure funding for tanker support.

-- Slow down or suspend remaining deliveries of equipment cascaded under the CFE Treaty.

-- Suspend the Turkish Defense Fund Transfer.

-- Suspend additional security assistance funding.

-- Put Turkey on the list of countries which support terrorism, based on its involvement in the bombing of Greek Tourist sites.

Greece

Greece views its interests almost exclusively through a regional prism. It perceives its current situation to be much less secure as a result of the end of the Cold War. The Greeks believe that their country and the Greek national identity (Hellenism) are under siege and on a losing trend. Related to this insecurity is Greece's long-standing fear of Turkey, which Greeks see as an even greater threat in the absence of the discipline provided by the Cold War.

Greece's embargo of FYROM and relationship relationship with Serbia have interfered with international efforts to tighten sanctions on Serbia-Montenegro, thus diminishing prospects for resolution of the Balkans conflict. In the face of the blockade to the south, the FYROM has resumed large-scale trading with Serbia as its own economy deteriorates.

The Greeks see the Kurds as Turkey's Achilles heel and are making some use of them to undermine a historical adversary. The PKK is increasingly active in Greece. PKK representatives have met with Greek parliamentarians and some low-level officials. The PKK supports terrorist operations from a facility in Greece, and may have received assistance from Greek intelligence services. We have warned Athens about the danger such activities pose to relations with Turkey, to no noticeable effect. Our conclusion is that the GOG condones but does not necessarily support PKK activity in Greece, although we continue to investigate the matter.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Long and Short Term Goals

Over the longer term, we seek to persuade Athens to abandon its confrontational approach in regional affairs, in favor of cooperation with us in developing an agenda for the economic and democratic development of the Balkan region. In the shorter term, our goals for Greece include (in priority order):

- o Cease encouragement of PKK terrorism;
- o Lift the embargo on FYROM;
- o Normalize Greek relations with Albania;
- o Tighten enforcement of UN sanctions on Serbia; and
- o Work constructively to help solve the Cyprus situation.

Carrots

As with Turkey, our means to accomplish these goals are circumscribed. Growing nationalism in Greece is both an obstacle to leadership and a result of the lack of strong leadership. Also like Turkey, Greece faces an economic crisis stemming from a misguided statist economic policy and resulting high budget deficits. However, Greece's position in the West is more secure than Turkey's. Its EU membership and a strong Congressional lobby here provide a more secure foundation of political and economic support, thereby reducing the incentives for Greece to moderate its nationalistic policies toward its neighbors. We need to try to establish a "strengthened partnership" with Greece with agreed goals and mutually-supportive definitions of national interest.

Some of the steps we could take at this point include:

I. Strengthen the USG-GOG dialogue:

-- Send the Presidential envoy who visits Turkey on to Greece to review Greek-Turkish relations and to warn Prime Minister Papandreou that Greece's management of its relationships with Turkey, Albania and FYROM are damaging for Greece, the Balkans, the EU, NATO, and the U.S. The message should reiterate the dangers of support for the PKK and call on Papandreou to lift the embargo on FYROM.

-- High-level officials visiting Turkey should also visit Greece to address Greek-Turkish tension and regional developments.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

II. Expand the dialogue to include key Western allies:

-- Initiate a major review of Turkish-Greek-Western relations with key allies with a view to coordinating long-term policy.

III. Enhance economic cooperation

-- Organize a USG-GOG trade mission to the Balkans led by Commerce Secretary Brown or Deputy Commerce Secretary Barram.

-- Encourage the GOG to maintain a dialogue with Turkey on issues other than the Aegean.

-- Form a U.S.-EU-Greek Economic Commission. (The USG would not be in a position to match the economic resources that the EU would bring to the table in such a commission.)

-- Offer technical assistance on organizing a Southern Balkans Trade/Economic Cooperation Project. OPIC already has a cooperation agreement with the GOG that could be a vehicle for action.

IV. Increase military cooperation:

-- Promote PFP exercises involving the U.S., Greece, Albania, FYROM and others, including Turkey. The exercises should be held in these countries. We should appeal to Greece to assume its natural role as NATO and U.S. partner in NATO/PFP activities in the region.

-- Make greater use of the Escess Defense Article Program to build up the Greek military.

Sticks

In the event Athens encourages terrorism against Turkey, a stronger response on our part would be necessary. Tougher GOG policies toward Albania or FYROM would also merit stronger measures by the USG. These could include:

-- Suspend or slow down remaining deliveries of equipment to be cascaded under the CFE Treaty.

-- Start pressuring Greeks on ethnic Muslims' status and rights.

-- Threaten to request additional conditionality on assistance pegged to Greek performance in FYROM, Albania, or against terrorism.

-- Put Greece on the list of countries which support terrorism, based on its involvement in the bombing of Greek Tourist sites.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Measures To Address Balkan issues:

In his July 13 report to the Secretary on the status of Greece/FYROM talks, Special Envoy Matthew Nimetz noted that both parties felt comfortable postponing further negotiations until after FYROM elections this October. Politically, the FYROM was not prepared to ratify an agreement with Greece until a new parliament had been elected. Macedonian President Gligorov indicated to Nimetz that the FYROM could muddle through the next three to four months, even with the Greek embargo in place. Nimetz noted that the most impatient party right now is the United States. His tentative judgement was that for the next few months we should watch the situation carefully, help the FYROM economically and politically in the short term where we can, but not play an activist role until after the FYROM elections.

In the meantime, however, there are some steps we can take on Balkan issues.

-- While continuing to press both sides to show flexibility, reevaluate our policy to hold off establishing diplomatic relations with the FYROM if the dispute with Greece is not settled by the end of 1994.

-- Shore up the FYROM's sagging economy by:

  o Weighing in at a senior level with the IMF/IBRD on the need to expedite all loans/projects for the FYROM. A "Friends of Macedonia" group could be set up in concert with key European donors to amplify this pressure.

  o Providing leadership for the immediate start of construction of a rail link connecting the FYROM to Bulgaria and Albania. This can be done through the IFI's and direct technical assistance/advisors.

  o Sponsoring a regional Balkan conference on developing East-West road/rail routes through the Balkans.

-- Push for more active CSCE involvement in Greek-Albanian relations, e.g., a monitoring team to look at problems of the Greek minority in Albania, the April 10 attack near the border with Greece, Albanian migrant workers in Greece, and more general concerns about border security.

-- Encourage Turkey to make its Balkan policy -- especially relations with Albania -- as transparent as possible to the Greeks.

-- Explore the upgrade of infrastructure in the FYROM, Albania and Bulgaria, including airport, port, road, and rail links needed for troop deployments.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

-- Work to channel the energies of the Greek and Turkish private sectors into cooperative projects with U.S. firms in the Balkans.

-- Upgrade of the UNPROFOR contingent in FYROM.

OPTIONS PAPER: LIFTING THE ARMS EMBARGO

This paper examines the possible impact and policy options open to the U.S. if the arms embargo against Bosnia were lifted as the result of a U.S. initiative. The paper assumes that our goal is to provide the Bosnian government with sufficient military capabilities to alter the situation on the battlefield and bring about Bosnian Serb acceptance of the Contact Group map. This would entail a U.S. commitment to support the government to the point it can hold its own and begin to turn the tide on the battlefield. This paper considers various other assumptions shaping our options, the range and mix of options available to us, and complications/issues we will need to address in advance of military engagement, including the need for a clear public rationale.

I. ASSUMPTIONS

Strategic Objectives: Our broader strategic objective is to prevent a broader Balkan war which could draw in Allies, damage our capacity to maintain a strong NATO, and severely strain relations with our closest Allies and Russia. The options we choose in pursuing our objectives in Bosnia must contain the risks to this strategic interest.

Multilateral Lift: Lifting the arms embargo through multilateral action is essential to securing broad-based international support and assistance after lift, including support from our NATO allies. Unilateral lift would create a major rift in the Alliance and damage relations with Russia. Ideally, there would be a provision in any UNSC resolution lifting the embargo that would call on member states/regional organizations to use all necessary means to defend at least Sarajevo and the other safe areas, and secure Bosnian Serb acceptance of the Contact Group Proposal. We should approach key allies early regarding the type of support they might be willing to provide, especially to defend Sarajevo. Without the use of Allied bases, particularly those in Italy, our ability to support the Bosnian government would be severely limited.

Bosnian Serb Reaction: Based on their past behavior, the Bosnian Serbs will likely react aggressively and pre-emptively to any lifting of the arms embargo. The Bosnian Serbs often exaggerate their military capabilities. Their aim would be to bring maximum pressure immediately to bear against the government in the hopes of forcing a settlement on their terms before the military tide could be turned. The eastern enclaves and Sarajevo would be priority targets, though in the case of the latter they might opt for strangulation and shelling rather than outright military take-over. Severing the Tuzla area from government-held lands to the south could be another possibility, as would widening the Posavina corridor. Key variables shaping their response include: the state of Belgrade-Pale relations, perceptions of international resolve to counter Bosnian Serb offensives, the willingness of Belgrade to intervene with men and material. With the U.S. perceived as a party to the conflict, acts of terrorism against U.S. interests cannot be ruled out.

Bosnian Government Vulnerabilities: The vulnerability of the eastern enclaves and Sarajevo, combined with the lag between lifting the embargo and increasing Bosnian military capabilities, virtually guarantee that lifting the embargo will require from the outset air support and a continued humanitarian relief effort. This is based on the assumption that while we might be able to tolerate the fall of relatively isolated and difficult to defend enclaves, we politically could not tolerate the fall or strangulation of Sarajevo. This argues strongly against a "lift and leave" option.

That said, Bosnian government forces have improved substantially over the past two years and the Interagency Balkan Task Force (Baseline Assessment Paper: Leveling the Battlefield) believes they can probably hold their own against determined Bosnian Serb assaults on the core Federation areas in central Bosnia so long as Federation unity is maintained. The Interagency Balkan Task Force estimates that Sarajevo, however, currently has only approximately 30 days worth of food supplies on hand.

Fate Of UNPROFOR: Lifting the arms embargo will almost certainly lead to UNPROFOR withdrawal. The British say they need 30 days advance notice to withdraw in an orderly fashion and 72 hours in a hostile situation where troops are extricated (with our help) and equipment is left behind. Among other things, UNPROFOR's departure will seriously complicate both air operations against the Serbs and any humanitarian relief effort. On the other hand, it should give us greater scope for taking robust action without fear of reprisals against UN personnel on the ground. While the idea of an UNPROFOR II deployed only in Federation territory as a stabilizing factor has been put forward, such a force would probably have little impact on the course of the conflict unless it were structured as a real combat force.

II. MILITARY OPTIONS/CAPABILITIES

In determining military support options, we need to consider several factors: what the Bosnians have now, what they need to alter the situation on the ground, whether new infusions of men and material on the Bosnian Serb side will increase those needs, and what we can and should do to invalidate or lessen the impact of negative factors. For example, we need to consider ways (such as a Kosovo Christmas-type warning) to reduce the likelihood of Serbian intervention or assistance.

We also need to consider the possibility that a convincing demonstration of force, applied early on and internationally supported, could substantially reduce the level and length of the military support effort needed to bring the Bosnian Serbs around. Similarly, the demonstrated ability of the Bosnian government to absorb weapons and improve its military capabilities over the last two years should be taken into account.

The analysis below views our policy choices in terms of light, medium, and heavy air support/arming options. But it should be noted that an argument can also be made that our real choice centers around a more fundamental question: whether or not we are willing to deploy U.S. ground forces. If we are not, then maximum and early use of air power and a maximum arming option are probably necessary to achieve our objectives. If we are not prepared for such an approach at the outset, then we should be prepared to escalate quickly in response to possible Serb actions.

Option 1: A Minimalist Military Support Option

Without substantial immediate outside support, Bosnian government forces would not be capable of lifting the blockade of Sarajevo or preventing the overrunning of the smaller eastern enclaves. As noted above, they would probably be able to withstand assaults on their core central areas. Needless to say, the capitulation of Sarajevo would be a great blow to the government and a setback to any international efforts to help them. It would also encourage the Bosnian Serbs to continue the conflict and make a negotiated settlement less likely.

Even if the U.S. did not furnish material support to the Bosnian government, weapons and possibly troops provided by friendly Islamic states would still flow into the country, perhaps in substantial numbers. This would be of great concern to Serbia, Macedonia and the rest of Europe. Islamization of the military re-supply effort would have a broad and long-term impact on the Balkan region and Europe. Aid would also arrive from Islamic states not friendly to the U.S., such as Iran. Such an effort would not be comparable to a determined U.S. effort but would over time improve the capability of Bosnian government forces versus the Bosnian Serbs.

The Joint Staff (Annex: Rearming the Federation) and Interagency Balkan Task Force (Baseline Assessment Paper: Leveling the Battlefield) estimate a robust U.S. effort would take up to a year to make government forces competitive. Any non-U.S. effort would probably take longer, and might never enable the government to level the playing field, particularly if the FRY increased its own arms supplies to Pale. Any Islamization of the military resupply effort, moreover, could cause the Muslim-Croat rapprochement to fray, itself jeopardizing the resupply effort.

Option 2: Lift With Interim Military Support

U.S. support for the Bosnian government for a limited period in the wake of lifting the embargo would obviously increase the ability of the government to compete with the Bosnian Serbs on more equal terms. How well they could compete would depend directly on the level and nature of support provided.

Sarajevo: Given the importance and vulnerability of Sarajevo, any initial U.S. support should focus on ways to keep humanitarian relief flowing into the city. Although air drops might provide a portion of the needed relief, the ideal solution would be to open up a land corridor running from core Federation territories into Sarajevo. This would at the very least require commitment of U.S. airpower, acting in concert with Bosnian government forces. In this regard, the Joint Staff believes that we should not assume that air power alone can prevent the fall of Sarajevo. Thus, if saving the city is a bottom line objective, we should be prepared to do what is necessary to save the city, up to and including the insertion of U.S. ground forces.

Determining what would work is clearly a priority objective and should be completed well prior to lifting the embargo. The August 9, 1993 NAC airstrike decision would provide adequate authority for NATO airstrikes, assuming NATO agreed to participate. In the wake of the departure of key allies from UNPROFOR, it would be highly questionable whether NATO Allies could reach a consensus on further participation. If NATO were willing to take this on, under the August 9 NAC decision, authorization from UN Secretary General Boutros Ghali for the first strike would still be needed. If the U.S. had to act outside the NATO context, perhaps as head of a coalition of the willing, we would need to decide whether to seek UN authority to undertake the strikes.

The Eastern Enclaves: The U.S. might also wish to help the Bosnian government defend the highly vulnerable eastern enclaves against Bosnian Serb attacks. If NATO were willing to take this on, we anticipate the Allies would require a new NAC decision reflecting the changed circumstances. The Allies would also want UN authority for NATO to act. If the U.S. acted alone, or as head of a coalition, new UN authority would presumably be required.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Supporting Bosnian Government Forces Elsewhere: Under a limited support option, the U.S. might decide not to risk its aircraft in what might be regarded as an uphill struggle to prevent at least the smaller enclaves from being overrun. The same might hold true for providing air support for Bosnian government forces facing attack in other parts of Bosnia. If we assume that these forces are capable of holding their own, we may wish to intervene only if the situation on a particular battlefront becomes desperate. Any intervention, particularly if it occurred apart from a safe area, could require new NATO authorization (if NATO were involved) and possibly additional UN authority.

Providing Equipment and Training: The U.S. would probably want to provide the Bosnian government with equipment and training as part of lifting the arms embargo. Clearly, the more of each we provided, and the sooner we provided it, the sooner the Bosnian government would be capable of bringing pressure to bear on the Bosnian Serbs to settle, and if necessary, of turning the tide on the battlefield. Viewed in this way, option 2 would behoove us to go all out to provide the necessary materiel and to provide it as soon as possible. Both the Joint Staff (Annex: Rearming the Federation) and the Interagency Balkan Task Force (Baseline Assessment Paper: Leveling the Battlefield) agree that a strong U.S. effort could equip and train Bosnian government forces to this task in no more than a year, although this would be an expensive proposition. The Task Force acknowledges, however, that Bosnian Serb military operations could divert government attention and lengthen this timetable.

The Interagency Balkan Task Force estimates government requirements at 120-200 tanks, 60-100 APCs, 200-350 artillery pieces and 25-40 MRLs. They also estimate 2,000 trucks would be needed, along with communication equipment, ammunition, fuel and other supplies. The Joint Staff estimates the price tag for acquiring such supplies would run over $3 billion.

The alternative to providing the government with the equipment it needed to turn the tide would be to give them less than what they needed. Although less expensive in the short run, this would risk prolonging the war, perhaps indefinitely, resulting in a higher cost in human life and inviting continuing domestic criticism and pressure to do more. In this regard, the Joint Staff outlines two less robust force upgrading initiatives, but they are not considered here since they would perforce not significantly alter the situation on the ground.

Under any approach, we would want to spread the burden as much as possible. Given the high costs of providing weaponry and transporting it, we would presumably want to pass the hat at an early stage to defer our own expenses. This would certainly involve approaching rich Islamic states and selected other states such as Japan. We would also want to strongly encourage other (particularly NATO) nations to provide equipment, although avoiding overcomplicating the array of weapons and other materiel that Bosnian government forces are obliged to master is probably a virtue.

Option 3: Lift With Long-term Support

If the Joint Staff and the Interagency Task Force are correct in their estimates, other things being equal, the Bosnian government should be able to begin turning the tide against the Bosnian Serbs after about a year. To the extent we do not frontload our support, the less pressure there will be on the Bosnian Serbs to accept a negotiated settlement, the longer it will take the government to get on equal footing with the Serbs and the longer our active involvement will last. Assuming that the war continues for some time after the playing field has been leveled, the Bosnian government will continue to need our support. The need for airpower will diminish, although the longer it is used the more quickly the government is likely to succeed in gaining its military objectives. Government forces will also need to replace weapons and other materiel lost in combat.

In an important sense, the distinction between options 2 and 3 is an artificial one. The less support we provide at the outset, the longer our involvement is likely to last. If we are going to provide the government with military equipment and air support, we should try to give them the ability to take the initiative as soon as they possibly can. We will in any event need to continue to support them until they are able to take the initiative, and on a contingency basis, in the event of unexpected reverses on the ground or FRY intervention. We have good reason to believe that if we can keep them afloat during the first key months--and this also means developing a strategy enabling Sarajevo to survive--we can be fairly confident that they will be able to field an increasingly capable force, bring increasing pressure to bear on the Bosnian Serbs to accept a negotiated settlement, and eventually, if necessary, begin to turn the tide. In seeking to lift the arms embargo, this should be our primary goal.

III. OTHER CONSIDERATIONS/ISSUES

NATO and UN Support

Clearly, the U.S. would have an interest in internationalizing the effort in Bosnia to the maximum extent possible. It would be very much in our interest politically to make this a NATO operation and to seek UN, and therefore, Russian support. To do this, we must, as a first step, get the arms embargo lifted multilaterally. A robust diplomatic initiative would be required to bring the allies on board. To the extent we have to go it alone we sacrifice key equities in NATO and in our relations with the Russians and the UN. Unilateral lift would rupture consensus within NATO on a key European security issue and could create a serious, long-term rift in the alliance. The military and economic burden would also fall more squarely on our shoulders. Without NATO, basing for air operations could become a serious problem.

Dealing with Reversals on the Ground

We must be prepared to deal with setbacks at each step of the escalatory ladder. At each stage, if a given mix of air power and arming options is not working, we will need to reach a judgment as to whether the setback is temporary and tactical or a reflection of a more fundamental problem. If the latter, we will need to decide whether to go in more deeply or conclude it is time to cut our losses. We need to recognize going in that air power will be impotent to stop the fighting once it enters major populated areas.

Preventing Spillover

Bosnia does not exist in a vacuum. We have a goal of preventing the conflict from spilling over into other parts of the region. Lifting the arms embargo could have a serious destabilizing impact on neighboring Krajina, in Kosovo, and in Macedonia.

Krajina: Although UNPROFOR may have departed from Bosnia, we have a strong interest in seeing it remain in both Croatia and Macedonia. UNPROFOR departure from the former could lead to new fighting in Krajina and to renewed conflict between Croatia and Serbia. We would need in any event to persuade Zagreb not to take advantage of events in Bosnia by seeking an outcome in Krajina which might only make things worse.

We will also need to confront how to handle the arms embargo against Croatia. Croatia is essential as a port of entry and conduit for sending equipment into Bosnia. Presumably we would need to either lift the arms embargo against Croatia or provide for right of transit. Either alternative would probably result in a substantial increase in Croatian military capabilities and alarm both the Krajina Serbs and Belgrade. This would need to be carefully managed.

Macedonia/Kosovo: Although a Serbian adventure in Macedonia may seem unlikely, our forces there are performing an important deterrent function and, if anything, should be strengthened. We should consider reiterating our Christmas warning to the Serbs that we would be prepared to employ military force against them in Kosovo and in Serbia proper in the event of a conflict in Kosovo caused by Serb action. UNPROFOR troops that remain near the Serbian border might be targets of retaliation.

Serbia: Lifting the embargo would probably not lead directly to Belgrade's intervention. The more successful the Bosnian government is on the ground, however, the greater the pressure will be on Serbia to intervene. This is something we should consider warning them about at an early stage. Should they nonetheless overtly intervene with men and materiel, we would need to consider whether to take military action against them. This would presumably require new authorities from both NATO (if this is a NATO operation) and the UN, unless we sought an omnibus authority in conjunction with lifting the embargo at the beginning of the process that dealt with all such contingencies.

Impact on the Federation

The impact of lifting the arms embargo on the Federation will depend on the course of events on the ground. The more prolonged the conflict and the more arms that flow to government forces, the more strain there will be on the Federation and the greater the risk to its survival. Success on the ground which leads the Bosnians to escalate their war aims could also prove a source of tension. On the other hand, the strategic reasons underlying Muslim-Croat cooperation vis-a-vis the Serbs will remain a positive factor and Zagreb's continued support for the Federation will be critical.

Keeping the Negotiating Track Going

Our primary goal in lifting the arms embargo is to pressure the Bosnian Serbs into accepting the Contact Group map, and failing this, to give the Bosnian government the means to begin to turn the tide. Any decision to lift the arms embargo, therefore, should go hand in hand with continuing efforts to obtain a negotiated settlement. As the pressure increases against the Bosnian Serbs, we should continue our efforts to get them to accept a negotiated settlement. As time passes, the international community (the Contact Group if it is still in place) may decide to alter the offer on the table. It is also possible that the Bosnian government will prove increasingly resistant to a negotiated settlement as its prospects on the battlefield improve. This will require careful management.

Need for Public Rationale

We need to develop an easily understood rationale for any U.S. military action in Bosnia in order to ensure we can sustain our involvement long enough to get the job done. Our public affairs strategy will need to dampen Kuwait-type expectations of an easy and relatively painless success, with no real setbacks along the way, as well as Somalia-type situation, where public reaction to media images of an American soldier being dragged through the streets led to a collapse of support for our effort and early withdrawal. Apart from the fact that we are dealing with the Balkans and not Somalia, the likelihood of this kind of atrocity being perpetrated will be reduced if we do not have a troop presence. We would, however, need to be prepared for the shooting down of U.S. planes and for captured and possibly tortured U.S. pilots.

Our most immediate public affairs concern, however, given the vulnerability of the enclaves and the time lag between lift and its impact on Bosnian ability to defend themselves and turn the tide, will likely be to ensure the public understands that there will be no quick military fix and the situation is likely to get worse before it gets better. To the extent that early and decisive use of air power neutralizes the Serbs' offensive capabilities and buys time for the Bosnians to level the playing field, our military support effort will be able to concentrate on less controversial training and supply functions. This should simplify the public affairs task and help prepare us for low-level, low-risk involvement for the longer haul, if that proves necessary.

INFORMATION PAPER

Subject: Lifting the Arms Embargo on Bosnia (U)

1. ~~(C)~~ Background. Should the Contact Group fail to agree to a significant disincentive program, to be applied as a result of the Serb rejection of the proposed map, the US may be forced to consider lifting the arms embargo on the Bosnian government. The objective of such a course of action would be to enhance the capabilities of the Federation military so that the situation on the battlefield can be altered enough to force the Serbs to agree to a negotiated political settlement.

2. (U) Courses of Action. There are three general Courses of Action (COAs) for rearming Bosnian forces: light, medium, and heavy.

a. ~~(S)~~ COA 1. Level the playing field. Provide the Bosnian Federation army with a strong offensive capability by arming it to the same level as the Bosnian Serbs, including small arms, mortars, light anti-armor weapons, AT mines, comm gear, tanks, APCs, heavy mortars, rocket launchers, counter-battery radar, etc. (Heavy option)

- This option would cost approximately $3+ billion dollars to accomplish and could require up to a year to accomplish.

EO 13526 1.4b

b. ~~(S)~~ COA 2. Upgrade existing forces and add maneuver/counterattack capability. Provide the Bosnian army an increased offensive capability by providing small arms, mortars, light anti-armor weapons, AT mines, comm gear, etc. to properly outfit the Bosnian army, plus tanks, APCs, heavy mortars, rocket launchers, artillery and counter-battery radars to protect safe areas. (Medium option)

- This option would cost approximately $1.7 billion dollars and take 6-8 months to accomplish.

c. ~~(S)~~ COA 3. Upgrade existing light forces. Provide small arms, mortars, light anti-armor weapons, AT mines, comm gear, etc. to properly outfit 30-50,000 troops, plus limited counter-battery radar/counter-fire artillery capability. (Light option).

- COA 3 would cost approximately $170-$200 million dollars. Light arms could be delivered and absorbed in as little as 2-4 four months. Heavier, more complex systems could require up to 8 months until operationally effective.

EO 13526 1.4a, 1.4b

3. ~~(S)~~ Strike Options. There are three general "strike" scenarios which could be coupled with the "lift" strategy: no support, interim support, and long-term support. Additionally, the applicability of current NATO obligations needs to be considered as well.

4. ~~(S)~~ Analysis. The following is a comparison of potential COAs and strike options, aimed at evaluating each combination's likelihood of success.

EO 13526 1.4a, 1.4b

Evaluation:

- Significantly altering the battlefield situation requires robust rearmament and air support. These are long-term, high-cost options.

EO 13526 1.4a, 1.4b

5. ~~(S)~~ Unilateral vs Multilateral. The COAs and air strike options remain the same, regardless of whether lifting the arms embargo unilaterally or multilaterally. The following variables, however, are germane:

EO 13526 1.4a, 1.4b

b. ~~(S)~~ Equipment Availability. Under a multilateral approach, the number of potential donors/suppliers would be greater. Embarking on a unilateral program, the US would assume primary responsibility for identifying, acquiring, funding, and supporting a rearmament effort.

EO 13526 1.4a, 1.4b

d. ~~(S)~~ Training. Under a unilateral approach, the US would be one of the few available sources of high-quality training. This would require putting troops on the

EO 13526 1.4a, 1.4b

6. (U) Mechanics of arming and training

a. ~~(S)~~ Equipment sources: Although limited stocks of required items are available (tanks, APCs, heavy mortars, artillery, and rocket launchers), the US may be required to identify other sources in order to meet Bosnia's requirements for items such as heavy artillery. COA 3, the light option, could be accomplished primarily on the international arms market.

b. ~~(S)~~ Transportation means and routes: The Federation agreement makes supply through Croatia the most cost effective option, although Croatia would probably demand significant percentage of the supplies and might balk at heavy weapons shipments.

EO 13526 1.4a, 1.4b

c. ~~(S)~~ Route protection:

EO 13526 1.4a, 1.4b

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

[004e]

EO 13526 1.4a, 1.4b

d. ~~(S)~~ Training: Training will probably require some US military presence in theater and thereby risk direct USG confrontation with the BSA. Time estimates vary from 2 months (very rudimentary level) for training of B-H forces in place, to a year or more if the USG attempts to level the playing field (COA 1).

- SF could provide in-country training for COA 3.
- COA 1 would require extensive use of training ranges to establish proficiency, plus significant maintenance training.

SYMMETRICAL RESPONSES

- LOCs through which arms must flow could be interdicted.
- The eastern enclaves could be seized or Sarajevo cutoff.

ASYMMETRICAL RESPONSES

- UN/NGO personnel could be taken hostage should those organizations attempt to withdraw.
- Utilities/support structures could be destroyed making Sarajevo or other urban areas uninhabitable.
- Terrorist attacks could be initiated outside the Balkan region.

4. (U) Conclusions

a. ~~(S)~~ If this strategy is pursued, the greatest likelihood for success derives from an approach which combines a robust rearmament effort and a complementary, long-term air operation. Dedicated TACPs are a must.

- This option is long-term and high cost.
- The strategy could require significant dedication of US assets, especially if pursued unilaterally.

b. ~~(S)~~ In pursuing a unilateral approach, the USG may undermine NATO solidarity and damage the credibility of the UN.

The Eastern Mediterranean: A Region of Crisis

Introduction and Goals

Greece and Turkey are the focus of a region of crisis extending from the Balkans and Macedonia through the Middle East and into Central Asia. The overriding United States interest in this area is stability and the absence of conflict, especially involving Russia. Our general goals are thus: (1) the relaxation of interstate tensions and avoidance of armed conflict: (2) the development and refinement of democratic regimes that defuse ethnic conflict; (3) the implementation of economic reform to help sustain political and economic development; and (4) the development of regional political and economic cooperation.

Solutions to regional problems are particularly difficult because of the long-standing "zero-sum" nature of regional rivalries. Policies which benefit Turkey risk a downturn in relations with Greece, and vice-versa. The same holds true in any approach to Greece and Albania, the GOG and FYROM, Turkey and Russia, and Armenia and Turkey. Additional USG funding for economic purposes is one of the best ways to help regional states while minimizing "zero-sum" opposition from others, since it is less controversial than political or security support. But additional funding is difficult in a time of budgetary stringency.

Growing strains in Greco-Turk relations and in their relations with the United States threaten a wide range of U.S. interests throughout the region. The upsurge in long-term animosity is increasingly difficult to contain because there is no longer a tight framework of Western Cold War solidarity. The U.S. will have to make a major investment of effort and resources to have an appreciable effect on developments which stem from a major realignment of interests and preoccupations in the region. U.S. interests in Turkey are more extensive than in Greece or other regional nations, and we have elaborated on these interests in Annex A.

TURKEY

Turkey is caught in a web of political and economic problems. A weak coalition government is having difficulty coping with the simultaneous challenges of combatting the Kurdistan Worker's Party (PKK), meeting the needs of a poor and growing population, and reforming an inefficient economy. The deterioration in Turkey's human rights situation is undermining the integrity of its democratic system as well as becoming a serious problem in Ankara's relations with the U.S. and other Western countries. Meanwhile, the post-Cold War decline in Turkey's active military importance has diminished

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Ankara's stock in the West. There has been an appreciable decline in aid levels, military cooperation, support for Turkish integration into the EU, understanding for Turkey's concerns about Russia, and willingness to help Turkey offset the cost of the Iraqi embargo.

Turkey nevertheless stands out as a democratic and secular nation in a region which has few democratic traditions, where Islamic fundamentalism is increasing, and where Christianity and Islam directly confront each other. A committed member of NATO, Turkey both strengthens Western defenses against the possibility of a resurgent Russian threat, and offers the potential to extend the reach of the West into an unstable part of the world which has critical oil resources. There is no doubt that an undemocratic, radical, destabilized, or fundamentalist Turkey would encourage forces in the region that are inimical to U.S. and Western interests.

Ankara is seeking to use improved relations with Israel to strengthen support in the U.S. and extend its influence in Central Asia. The Israeli government views democratic, secular Turkey as a counterweight to Iraq, Syria, Iran, and fundamentalism in general. Common cause between Tel Aviv and Ankara has some limited potential to move Middle Eastern and Central Asian developments in a positive direction.

Final agreement to flush the mothballed Iraqi pipeline has not yet been reached as Turkey is still working to obtain Iraq's agreement. The Turks continue to feel that their economic sacrifices to implement the UN sanctions against Iraq have gone largely unappreciated. This feeling reinforces popular sentiment that Turkey will never be accepted as a full-fledged member of the Western "club," and that Ankara must increasingly pursue its own interests without special deference to the West.

Near to Mid-Term Objectives

Over time, we seek an economically successful, secular and democratic state, with improved human rights performance, capable of acting as a bridge to countries further east, while remaining solidly rooted in the Western security system. In the shorter term, our goals with Turkey include (in priority order):

- An end to any bombing campaign (e.g., Rhodes) against Greece by the Government of Turkey (GOT);
- Continuation of Operation Provide Comfort and the maintenance of the regime of sanctions against Iraq;
- Cooperation in the amelioration of regional conflicts, including the Cyprus dispute, the war in Bosnia, and the conflict in Nagorno-Karabakh;

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

- Improved human rights performance, including an end to torture and restrictions on freedom of expression; and

- Continuation of the economic reform program enacted in April 1994.

Carrots

In the current political and fiscal environment, U.S. ability to secure these goals is limited. There is nevertheless a range of steps we can take. These are listed below by category, in order of ascending difficulty within each category.

I. Strengthen the USG-GOT dialogue: We have a number of important messages to send to the Government of Turkey on security, political and economic issues which will be difficult to deliver and to receive. They need to be made at the highest possible levels, and they need to be repeated. For this purpose, a series of high level visitors would be useful. If done properly, such visitors could serve the additional function of providing reassurance to the GOT that the USG remains committed to the relationship. Visits could include:

-- A Presidential envoy to warn Prime Minister Ciller of the serious danger to Turkey's Western ties posed by unilateral action against Greece, including covert action, to review our political agenda with Turkey and to reinforce the need for urgent human rights improvements. A senior military officer should accompany the envoy to convey these same considerations to the Turkish military. Possible emissaries include:

  - NSA Tony Lake
  - U/S Tarnoff

  Following the Presidential envoy, senior officials should periodically be used to reiterate the messages that were passed, both in order to maintain the dialogue and to keep the pressure on Ankara to move in a desirable direction. Discussions should also center on regional issues such as Nagorno-Karabakh, Central Asia, Iraq, Russia and the Middle East, in order to emphasize the importance the USG attaches to working with Turkey as an equal partner. Possible emissaries for this task include:

  - New EUR A/S Holbrooke
  - DRL A/S Shattuck
  - NSC Europe Director Vershbow
  - New EUR DAS Frasure.
  - Incoming Coordinator for Counter-Terrorism Wilcox.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Meanwhile, we should use every possible venue and occasion to reiterate and reinforce the messages that have been passed.

-- In addition to visits by USG officials to Turkey, there will be opportunities to use visits by GOT officials to the U.S. to pursue this high level dialogue:

  - o An early invitation should be extended to the new Turkish MFA Under secretary to visit Washington as soon as he is named, as part of an effort to revitalize the U.S.-Turkey Steering Group.

  - o The UNGA will bring the new Turkish Foreign Minister to New York and possibly to Washington. It would be appropriate for the Secretary to meet with him.

  - o The annual meeting of the U.S.-Turkey Joint Economic Commission will be held in Washington in November or December and will bring a number of senior Turkish economic officials.

II. Expand the dialogue to include key Western allies: While the U.S. has the strongest bilateral relationship with Turkey of any country, other Western nations (eg. UK, Germany, France) can also exercise influence on Turkey. It might be useful to initiate a major review of Turkish-Greek-Western relations with key allies with a view to coordinating long-term political and security policies.

III. Expand the dialogue to include key Middle Eastern countries: Key regional countries such as Israel, Saudi Arabia, and Kuwait have expressed concern over the strains in Turkey and would like to work with us to help alleviate them. It is in our interest to help establish closer ties between these countries and Turkey. We should involve them in our consultations on Turkey, encourage them to work with us in providing assistance to Turkey, and stimulate them to pursue parallel initiatives with Turkey.

IV. Strengthen material incentives to Turkey:

-- Establish a U.S.-Turkish commission to promote cooperative assistance to the Caucasus and Central Asia, and commit a portion of U.S. assistance destined for Central Asia to a tripartite program involving Turkey in such areas as the provision of medical services.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

-- Increase Turkey's duty-free access to the U.S. market, by agreeing to the GOT's request to add specific categories of articles not currently covered under the GSP list.

-- Establish and generously fund a special office in the Commerce Department to promote U.S.-Turkish trade, and create a special interagency committee chaired by the Secretary of Commerce to promote U.S. trade with Turkey (and perhaps other Big Emerging Markets).

-- Organize a USG-GOG trade mission to the Balkans led by Commerce Secretary Brown or Deputy Commerce Secretary Barram.

-- Keep open the possibility of creating a loan guarantee program for Turkey should Turkish interest rekindle.

-- Make best efforts to remove the Congressional hold on FY'94 ESF and to provide additional ESF directed to use in the Turkish southeast, contingent on GOT steps toward a political resolution of the Kurdish problem.

-- Provide funding for cooperative human-rights projects, such as the operation of a "blue-ribbon committee" of senior statesmen to examine Turkey's human rights performance and make appropriate recommendations.

-- Seek additional assistance which could be offered contingent on Turkish-Greek agreement on concrete measures of cooperation, e.g., military debt reduction (for both Turkey and Greece) in exchange for confidence-building measures, including a reduction of military activity, in the Aegean.

-- Seek special bilateral assistance (perhaps $50-100 million grant) to support Turkey's contribution to Provide Comfort.

V. Respond to outstanding Turkish concerns:

-- Assure that USG action on outstanding bilateral economic problems such as Section 301 trade reviews and IIAA petition to remove Turkey from GSP is as favorable to Turkey as possible.

-- Grant Turkey's recent request for swing in several quota categories under the bilateral textile agreement.

-- Reverse DS's decision to draw down personal security for the Turkish Consul General in Los Angeles ($800,000 cost).

-- Ensure that survivors of Turks killed in the downing of the two U.S. helicopters receive adequate compensation.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

-- Impress our European allies with the terrorist nature of the PKK, and encourage them to close down offices with demonstrated PKK affiliations in their countries.

-- Continue pressing the government of Greece to take action against PKK activities.

VI. Strengthen Congressional support for relations with Turkey:

-- Encourage visits to Turkey by Members of Congress, especially those particularly concerned with human rights. Visits might also include Provide Comfort operations, and could be conducted jointly with Turkish parliamentarians.

-- Intensify cooperation with Members of Congress who are supportive of Turkey.

-- Press the case for strong U.S. interests in Turkey with Members of Congress who are hostile to Turkey.

-- Encourage the GOT to take Congressional concerns more seriously, and to devote more attention to Congress, such as by sending senior Turkish statesmen to Washington to meet with Members of Congress.

VII. Increase Military Cooperation:

-- Promote PFP and other peacekeeping exercises in Turkey or involving Turkish troops, including help with planning, the provision of special funding, and pressure on key allies and on the Russians to participate.

-- Conclude the "Arrangement for Transfer" of the Turkish Defense Fund expeditiously and encourage the GOT to conclude the DECA review.

-- Support a Turkish proposal for an interim tanker capability, pending arrival of refurbished tankers in 1997, provided the MOD signs the letter of offer and acceptance for a specific number of refurbished tankers and uses the interim tankers to reduce U.S. operational commitments.

-- Urge the TGS to commit to joint training activities and to pursue common military doctrine.

-- Maintain high levels of security assistance loan credits, if at all possible at preferential rates, and IMET funding.

regime against Iraq would justify a resort to stronger measures to change GOT policies. A harder GOT line on Cyprus, in the Balkans or Nagorno-Karabakh also might require a sharper response from us. In such circumstances, the following measures are at our disposal:

-- Suspend allocation of preferential textile quotas.

-- Block any NATO infrastructure funding for tanker support.

-- Slow down or suspend remaining deliveries of equipment cascaded under the CFE Treaty.

-- Suspend the Turkish Defense Fund Transfer.

-- Suspend additional security assistance funding.

-- Put Turkey on the list of countries which support terrorism, based on its involvement in the bombing of Greek Tourist sites.

Greece

Greece views its interests almost exclusively through a regional prism. It perceives its current situation to be much less secure as a result of the end of the Cold War. The Greeks believe that their country and the Greek national identity (Hellenism) are under siege and on a losing trend. Related to this insecurity is Greece's long-standing fear of Turkey, which Greeks see as an even greater threat in the absence of the discipline provided by the Cold War.

Greece's embargo of FYROM and relationship relationship with Serbia have interfered with international efforts to tighten sanctions on Serbia-Montenegro, thus diminishing prospects for resolution of the Balkans conflict. In the face of the blockade to the south, the FYROM has resumed large-scale trading with Serbia as its own economy deteriorates.

The Greeks see the Kurds as Turkey's Achilles heel and are making some use of them to undermine a historical adversary. The PKK is increasingly active in Greece. PKK representatives have met with Greek parliamentarians and some low-level officials. The PKK supports terrorist operations from a facility in Greece, and may have received assistance from Greek intelligence services. We have warned Athens about the danger such activities pose to relations with Turkey, to no noticeable effect. Our conclusion is that the GOG condones but does not necessarily support PKK activity in Greece, although we continue to investigate the matter.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Long and Short Term Goals

Over the longer term, we seek to persuade Athens to abandon its confrontational approach in regional affairs, in favor of cooperation with us in developing an agenda for the economic and democratic development of the Balkan region. In the shorter term, our goals for Greece include (in priority order):

- o Cease encouragement of PKK terrorism;
- o Lift the embargo on FYROM;
- o Normalize Greek relations with Albania;
- o Tighten enforcement of UN sanctions on Serbia; and
- o Work constructively to help solve the Cyprus situation.

Carrots

As with Turkey, our means to accomplish these goals are circumscribed. Growing nationalism in Greece is both an obstacle to leadership and a result of the lack of strong leadership. Also like Turkey, Greece faces an economic crisis stemming from a misguided statist economic policy and resulting high budget deficits. However, Greece's position in the West is more secure than Turkey's. Its EU membership and a strong Congressional lobby here provide a more secure foundation of political and economic support, thereby reducing the incentives for Greece to moderate its nationalistic policies toward its neighbors. We need to try to establish a "strengthened partnership" with Greece with agreed goals and mutually-supportive definitions of national interest.

Some of the steps we could take at this point include:

I. Strengthen the USG-GOG dialogue:

-- Send the Presidential envoy who visits Turkey on to Greece to review Greek-Turkish relations and to warn Prime Minister Papandreou that Greece's management of its relationships with Turkey, Albania and FYROM are damaging for Greece, the Balkans, the EU, NATO, and the U.S. The message should reiterate the dangers of support for the PKK and call on Papandreou to lift the embargo on FYROM.

-- High-level officials visiting Turkey should also visit Greece to address Greek-Turkish tension and regional developments.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

II. Expand the dialogue to include key Western allies:

-- Initiate a major review of Turkish-Greek-Western relations with key allies with a view to coordinating long-term policy.

III. Enhance economic cooperation

-- Organize a USG-GOG trade mission to the Balkans led by Commerce Secretary Brown or Deputy Commerce Secretary Barram.

-- Encourage the GOG to maintain a dialogue with Turkey on issues other than the Aegean.

-- Form a U.S.-EU-Greek Economic Commission. (The USG would not be in a position to match the economic resources that the EU would bring to the table in such a commission.)

-- Offer technical assistance on organizing a Southern Balkans Trade/Economic Cooperation Project. OPIC already has a cooperation agreement with the GOG that could be a vehicle for action.

IV. Increase military cooperation:

-- Promote PFP exercises involving the U.S., Greece, Albania, FYROM and others, including Turkey. The exercises should be held in these countries. We should appeal to Greece to assume its natural role as NATO and U.S. partner in NATO/PFP activities in the region.

-- Make greater use of the Escess Defense Article Program to build up the Greek military.

Sticks

In the event Athens encourages terrorism against Turkey, a stronger response on our part would be necessary. Tougher GOG policies toward Albania or FYROM would also merit stronger measures by the USG. These could include:

-- Suspend or slow down remaining deliveries of equipment to be cascaded under the CFE Treaty.

-- Start pressuring Greeks on ethnic Muslims' status and rights.

-- Threaten to request additional conditionality on assistance pegged to Greek performance in FYROM, Albania, or against terrorism.

-- Put Greece on the list of countries which support terrorism, based on its involvement in the bombing of Greek Tourist sites.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Measures To Address Balkan issues:

In his July 13 report to the Secretary on the status of Greece/FYROM talks, Special Envoy Matthew Nimetz noted that both parties felt comfortable postponing further negotiations until after FYROM elections this October. Politically, the FYROM was not prepared to ratify an agreement with Greece until a new parliament had been elected. Macedonian President Gligorov indicated to Nimetz that the FYROM could muddle through the next three to four months, even with the Greek embargo in place. Nimetz noted that the most impatient party right now is the United States. His tentative judgement was that for the next few months we should watch the situation carefully, help the FYROM economically and politically in the short term where we can, but not play an activist role until after the FYROM elections.

In the meantime, however, there are some steps we can take on Balkan issues.

-- While continuing to press both sides to show flexibility, reevaluate our policy to hold off establishing diplomatic relations with the FYROM if the dispute with Greece is not settled by the end of 1994.

-- Shore up the FYROM's sagging economy by:

  - o Weighing in at a senior level with the IMF/IBRD on the need to expedite all loans/projects for the FYROM. A "Friends of Macedonia" group could be set up in concert with key European donors to amplify this pressure.

  - o Providing leadership for the immediate start of construction of a rail link connecting the FYROM to Bulgaria and Albania. This can be done through the IFI's and direct technical assistance/advisors.

  - o Sponsoring a regional Balkan conference on developing East-West road/rail routes through the Balkans.

-- Push for more active CSCE involvement in Greek-Albanian relations, e.g., a monitoring team to look at problems of the Greek minority in Albania, the April 10 attack near the border with Greece, Albanian migrant workers in Greece, and more general concerns about border security.

-- Encourage Turkey to make its Balkan policy -- especially relations with Albania -- as transparent as possible to the Greeks.

-- Explore the upgrade of infrastructure in the FYROM, Albania and Bulgaria, including airport, port, road, and rail links needed for troop deployments.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

-- Work to channel the energies of the Greek and Turkish private sectors into cooperative projects with U.S. firms in the Balkans.

-- Upgrade of the UNPROFOR contingent in FYROM.

The Eastern Mediterranean: A Region of Crisis

Introduction and Goals

Greece and Turkey are the focus of a region of crisis extending from the Balkans and Macedonia through the Middle East and into Central Asia. The overriding United States interest in this area is stability and the absence of conflict, especially involving Russia. Our general goals are thus: (1) the relaxation of interstate tensions and avoidance of armed conflict: (2) the development and refinement of democratic regimes that defuse ethnic conflict; (3) the implementation of economic reform to help sustain political and economic development; and (4) the development of regional political and economic cooperation.

Solutions to regional problems are particularly difficult because of the long-standing "zero-sum" nature of regional rivalries. Policies which benefit Turkey risk a downturn in relations with Greece, and vice-versa. The same holds true in any approach to Greece and Albania, the GOG and FYROM, Turkey and Russia, and Armenia and Turkey. Additional USG funding for economic purposes is one of the best ways to help regional states while minimizing "zero-sum" opposition from others, since it is less controversial than political or security support. But additional funding is difficult in a time of budgetary stringency.

Growing strains in Greco-Turk relations and in their relations with the United States threaten a wide range of U.S. interests throughout the region. The upsurge in long-term animosity is increasingly difficult to contain because there is no longer a tight framework of Western Cold War solidarity. The U.S. will have to make a major investment of effort and resources to have an appreciable effect on developments which stem from a major realignment of interests and preoccupations in the region. U.S. interests in Turkey are more extensive than in Greece or other regional nations, and we have elaborated on these interests in Annex A.

Turkey

Turkey is caught in a web of political and economic problems. A weak coalition government is having difficulty coping with the simultaneous challenges of combatting the Kurdistan Worker's Party (PKK), meeting the needs of a poor and growing population, and reforming an inefficient economy. The deterioration in Turkey's human rights situation is undermining the integrity of its democratic system as well as becoming a serious problem in Ankara's relations with the U.S. and other Western countries. Meanwhile, the post-Cold War decline in Turkey's active military importance has diminished

Ankara's stock in the West. There has been an appreciable decline in aid levels, military cooperation, support for Turkish integration into the EU, understanding for Turkey's concerns about Russia, and willingness to help Turkey offset the cost of the Iraqi embargo.

Turkey nevertheless stands out as a democratic and secular nation in a region which has few democratic traditions, where Islamic fundamentalism is increasing, and where Christianity and Islam directly confront each other. A committed member of NATO, Turkey both strengthens western defenses against the possibility of a resurgent Russian threat, and offers the potential to extend the reach of the West into an unstable part of the world which has critical oil resources. There is no doubt that an undemocratic, radical, destabilized, or fundamentalist Turkey would encourage forces in the region that are inimical to U.S. and Western interests.

Ankara is seeking to use improved relations with Israel to strengthen support in the U.S. and extend its influence in Central Asia. The Israeli government views democratic, secular Turkey as a counterweight to Iraq, Syria, Iran, and fundamentalism in general. Common cause between Tel Aviv and Ankara has some limited potential to move Middle Eastern and Central Asian developments in a positive direction.

Final agreement to flush the mothballed Iraqi pipeline appears close at hand but has not yet been reached. Meanwhile, the Turks continue to feel that their economic sacrifices to implement the UN sanctions against Iraq have gone largely unappreciated. This feeling reinforces popular sentiment that Turkey will never be accepted as a full-fledged member of the Western "club," and that Ankara must increasingly pursue its own interests without special deference to the West.

Goals and Objectives

Over time, we seek an economically successful, secular and democratic state, with improved human rights performance, capable of acting as a bridge to countries further east, while remaining solidly rooted in the Western security system. In the shorter term, our goals with Turkey include (in priority order):

- An end to any bombing campaign (e.g., Rhodes) against Greece by the Government of Turkey (GOT);
- Continuation of Operation Provide Comfort and the maintenance of the regime of sanctions against Iraq;
- Cooperation in the amelioration of regional conflicts, including the Cyprus dispute, the war in Bosnia, and the conflict in Nagorno-Karabakh; and

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

- o Improved human rights performance, including an end to torture and restrictions on freedom of expression;

- o Continuation of the economic reform/stabilization program enacted in April 1994.

Carrots

In the current political and fiscal environment, U.S. ability to secure these goals is limited. There are nevertheless a range of steps we can take. These are listed below by category, in order of ascending difficulty within each category.

I. Strengthen the USG-GOT dialogue: We have a number of important messages to send to the Government of Turkey on security, political and economic issues which will be difficult to deliver and to receive. They need to be made at the highest possible levels, and they need to be repeated. For this purpose a series of high level visitors would be useful. If done properly, such visitors could serve the additional function of providing reassurance to the GOT that the USG remains committed to the relationship. Visits could include:

-- A Presidential envoy to warn Prime Minister Ciller of the serious danger to Turkey's Western ties posed by unilateral action against Greece, including covert action, and to reinforce the need for urgent human rights improvements.

-- Senior officials to reiterate that message, persuade the Turks to sign on to specific steps to improve the human rights situation, and address other political developments within Turkey. Possible emissaries include:

  - o NSA Tony Lake
  - o U/S Tarnoff
  - o New EUR A/S Holbrooke
  - o DRL A/S Shattuck
  - o NSC Europe Director Vershbow
  - o New EUR DAS Frasure.
  - o Incoming Coordinator for Counter-Terrorism Wilcox.

-- Senior foreign policy officials to expand discussion of U.S.-Turkish policy on regional issues such as Nagorno-Karabakh, Central Asia, Iraq, and Russia, in order to emphasize the importance the USG attaches to working with Turkey as a equal partner. These could include:

  - o S/NIS head Jim Collins
  - o Nagorno-Karabakh negotiator Pressel.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

- o High-level NEA officers to discuss Iraq, Syria, and the Middle East Peace Process.

-- The annual U.S. Turkish bilateral counter-terrorism consultations could be used to raise U.S.concerns on the human rights elements as well as security elements of the Kurdish issue. The next session will be held in Ankara in the fall.

-- In addition to visits by USG officials to Turkey, there will be opportunities to use visits by GOT officials to the U.S. to pursue this high level dialogue:

- o An early invitation should be extended to the new Turkish MFA Under secretary to visit Washington as soon as he is named, as part of an effort to revitalize the U.S.-Turkey Steering Group.

- o The UNGA will bring the new Turkish Foreign Minister to New York and possibly to Washington. It would be appropriate for the Secretary to meet with him.

- o The annual meeting of the U.S.-Turkey Joint Economic Commission will be held in Washington in November or December and will bring a number of senior Turkish economic officials.

II. Expand the dialogue to include key Western allies: While the U.S. has the strongest bilateral relationship with Turkey of any country, other Western nations (eg. UK, Germany, France) can also exercise influence on Turkey. Turkey particularly values NATO, and it might be useful to initiate a major review of Turkish-Greek-Western relations with key allies with a view to coordinating long-term political and security policies.

III. Expand the dialogue to include key Middle Eastern countries: Key regional countries such as Israel, Saudi Arabia, and Kuwait have expressed concern over the strains in Turkey and would like to work with us to help alleviate them. It is in our interest to help establish closer ties between these countries and Turkey. We should involve them in our consultations on Turkey, encourage them to work with us in providing assistance to Turkey, and stimulate them to pursue parallel initiatives with Turkey.

IV. Strengthen material incentives to Turkey:

-- Commit a portion of U.S. assistance destined for Central Asia to a tripartite program involving Turkey in such areas as the provision of medical services.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

-- Increase Turkey's duty-free access to the U.S. market. (This would require legislation and a GATT waiver).

-- Establish a special interagency committee chaired by the Secretary of Commerce to promote U.S. trade with Turkey (and perhaps other Big Emerging Markets).

-- Establish and generously fund a special office in the Commerce Department to promote U.S.-Turkish trade.

-- Keep open the possibility of creating a loan guarantee program for Turkey should Turkish interest rekindle.

-- Establish a U.S.-Turkish commission to promote cooperative assistance to the Caucasus and Central Asia.

-- Make best efforts to remove the Congressional hold on FY'94 ESF and to provide additional ESF directed to use in the Turkish southeast, contingent on GOT steps toward a political resolution of the Kurdish problem.

-- Provide funding for cooperative human-rights projects.

-- Seek additional assistance which could be offered contingent on Turkish-Greek agreement on concrete measures of cooperation, e.g., military debt reduction (for both Turkey and Greece) in exchange for confidence-building measures, including a reduction of military activity, in the Aegean.

-- Seek special bilateral assistance (perhaps $50-100 million grant) to support Turkey's contribution to Provide Comfort.

V. Respond to outstanding Turkish concerns:

-- Assure that USG action on outstanding bilateral economic problems such as Section 301 trade reviews and IIAA petition to remove Turkey from GSP is as favorable to Turkey as possible..

-- Grant Turkey's recent request for swing in several quota categories under the bilateral textile agreement.

-- Reverse DS's decision to draw down personal security for the Turkish Consul General in Los Angeles ($800,000 cost).

-- Insure that survivors of Turks killed in the downing of the two U.S. helicopters receive adequate compensation.

-- Impress our European allies with the terrorist nature of the PKK, and encourage them to close down offices with demonstrated PKK affiliations in their countries.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

-- Continue pressing the government of Greece to cease all support, material or otherwise, for the PKK.

VI. Strengthen Congressional support for relations with Turkey:

-- Encourage visits to Turkey by Members of Congress, especially those particularly concerned with human rights. Visits might also include Provide Comfort operations, and could be conducted jointly with Turkish parliamentarians.

-- Intensify cooperation with Members of Congress who are supportive of Turkey.

-- Press the case for strong U.S. interests in Turkey with Members of Congress who are hostile to Turkey.

-- Encourage the GOT to take Congressional concerns more seriously, and to devote more attention to Congress, such as by sending senior Turkish statesmen to Washington to meet with Members of Congress.

VII. Increase Military Cooperation:

-- Transfer the Turkish Defense Fund (TDF) to Turkey under terms more favorable than the President outlined in his March letter to PM Ciller.

adhere to $1B.

-- Promote PFP and other peacekeeping exercises in Turkey or involving Turkish troops, including help with planning, the provision of special funding, and pressure on key allies and on the Russians to participate.

-- Conclude the "Arrangement for Transfer" of the Turkish Defense Fund expeditiously and encourage the GOT to conclude the DECA review.

-- Support a Turkish proposal for an interim tanker capability, pending arrival of refurbished tankers in 1997, provided the MOD signs the letter of offer and acceptance for a specific number of refurbished tankers and uses the interim tankers to reduce U.S. operational commitments.

-- Urge the TGS to commit to joint training activities and to pursue common military doctrine.

-- Maintain high levels of security assistance loan credits, if at all possible at preferential rates, and IMET funding.

Sticks

Should they become necessary, there are also stronger measures at our disposal:

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

-- Suspend allocation of preferential textile quotas.

-- Threaten to block any NATO infrastructure funding for tanker support.

-- Threaten to slow down or suspend remaining deliveries of equipment cascaded under the CFE Treaty.

-- Suspend the Turkish Defense Fund Transfer.

-- Suspend additional security assistance funding.

-- Put Turkey on the list of countries which support terrorism, based on its involvement in the bombing of Greek tourist sites.

Greece

As in the case of Turkey, growing nationalism in Greece is both an obstacle to leadership and a result of the lack of strong leadership. Also like Turkey, Greece faces an economic crisis stemming from a misguided statist economic policy and resulting high budget deficits. However, Greece's position in the West is more secure than Turkey's. Its EU membership and a strong Congressional lobby here provide a more secure foundation of political and economic support, thereby reducing the incentives for Greece to moderate its nationalistic policies toward its neighbors.

Greece views its interests almost exclusively through a regional prism. It perceives its current situation to be much less secure as a result of the end of the Cold War. The Greeks believe that their country and the Greek national identity (Hellenism) are under siege and on a losing trend. Related to this insecurity is Greece's long-standing fear of Turkey, which Greeks see as an even greater threat in the absence of the discipline provided by the Cold War.

The embargo and Greece's relationship with Serbia have interfered with international efforts to tighten sanctions on Serbia-Montenegro, thus diminishing prospects for resolution of the Balkans conflict. In the face of the blockade to the south, the FYROM has had no choice but to resume large-scale trading with Serbia as its own economy deteriorates.

The Greeks see the Kurds as Turkey's Achilles heel and are making some use of them to undermine a historical adversary. The PKK is increasingly active in Greece. PKK representatives have met with Greek parliamentarians and some low-level officials. The PKK supports terrorist operations from a facility in Greece, and may have received assistance from Greek intelligence services. We have warned Athens about the danger such activities pose to relations with Turkey, to no noticeable effect. Our conclusion is that the GOG condones but does not necessarily support PKK activity in Greece, although we continue to investigate the matter.

Long and Short Term Goals

Over the longer term, we seek to persuade Athens to abandon its antagonistic and destructive approach to regional affairs, in favor of cooperation with us in developing an agenda for the economic and democratic development of the Balkan region. In the shorter term, our goals with Greece include (in priority order:

- Lift the embargo on FYROM;
- Cease encouragement of PKK terrorism ~~on Greek soil~~;
- Normalize Greek relations with Albania;
- Tighten enforcement of UN sanctions on Serbia; and
- Work constructively to help solve the Cyprus situation.

Carrots

As with Turkey, our means to accomplish these goals are circumscribed. Growing nationalism in Greece is both an obstacle to leadership and a result of the lack of strong leadership. Also like Turkey, Greece faces an economic crisis stemming from a misguided statist economic policy and resulting high budget deficits. However, Greece's position in the West is more secure than Turkey's. Its EU membership and a strong Congressional lobby here provide a more secure foundation of political and economic support, thereby reducing the incentives for Greece to moderate its nationalistic policies toward its neighbors. To remedy these tendencies, we need to try to establish a "strengthened partnership" with Greece with agreed goals and mutually-supportive definitions of national interest.

Some of the steps we could take at this point include:

I. Strengthen the USG-GOG dialogue:

-- Send the Presidential envoy who visits Turkey on to Greece to review Greek-Turkish relations and to warn Prime Minister Papandreau that Greece's management of its relationships with Turkey, Albania and FYROM are damaging for Greece, the Balkans, the EU, NATO, and the U.S. The message should reiterate the dangers of support for the PKK and call on Papandreau to lift the embargo on FYROM.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

-- High-level officials visiting Turkey should also visit Greece to address Greek-Turkish tension and regional developments.

II. Expand the dialogue to include key Western allies:

-- Initiate a major review of Turkish-Greek-Western relations with key allies with a view to coordinating long-term policy.

III. Enhance economic cooperation

-- Organize a USG-GOG trade mission to the Balkans led by Commerce Secretary Brown or Deputy Commerce Secretary Barram.

-- Encourage the GOG to maintain a dialogue with Turkey on issues other than the Aegean.

-- Form a U.S.-EU-Greek Economic Commission. (The USG would not be in a position to match the economic resources that the EU would bring to the table in such a commission.)

-- Offer technical assistance on organizing a Southern Balkans Trade/Economic Cooperation Project. OPIC already has a cooperation agreement with the GOG that could be a vehicle for action.

IV. Increase military cooperation:

-- Promote PFP exercises involving the U.S., Greece, Albania, FYROM and others, eventually including Turkey. These exercises should be held these countries. We should appeal to Greece to assume its natural role as NATO and U.S. partner in NATO/PFP activities in the region, but not fall off our program if Greece declines.

-- Make greater use of the Escess Defense Article Program to build up the Greek military.

Sticks

Should they become necessary, there are also stronger measures at our disposal:

-- Suspend or slow down remaining deliveries of equipment to be cascaded under the CFE Treaty.

-- Start pressuring Greeks on ethnic Muslims' status and rights.

-- Threaten to request additional conditionality on assistance pegged to Greek performance in FYROM, Albania, or against terrorism.

Measures To Address Balkan issues:

In his July 13 report to the Secretary on the status of Greece/FYROM talks, Special Envoy Matthew Nimetz noted that both parties felt comfortable postponing further negotiations until after FYROM elections this October. Politically, the FYROM was not prepared to ratify an agreement with Greece until a new parliament had been elected. Macedonian President Gligorov indicated to Nimetz that the FYROM could muddle through the next three to four months, even with the Greek embargo in place. Nimetz noted that the most impatient party right now is the United States. His tentative judgement was that for the next few months we should watch the situation carefully, help the FYROM economically and politically in the short term where we can, but not play an activist role until after the FYROM elections.

In the meantime, however, there are some steps we can take on Balkan issues.

-- President Berisha should be invited to the United States to meet either the President or Vice President to signal U.S. support. A visit would also offer an opportunity to press Albania and the FYROM to take confidence-building steps toward Greece.

-- While continuing to press both sides to show flexibility, reevaluate our policy to hold off establishing diplomatic relations with the FYROM if the dispute with Greece is not settled by the end of 1994.

-- Shore up the FYROM's sagging economy by:

  o Weighing in at a senior level with the IMF/IBRD on the need to expedite all loans/projects for the FYROM. A "Friends of Macedonia" group could be set up in concert with key European donors to amplify this pressure.

  o Providing leadership for the immediate start of construction of a rail link connecting the FYROM to Bulgaria and Albania. This can be done through the IFI's and direct technical assistance/advisors.

  o Sponsoring a regional Balkan conference on developing East-West road/rail routes through the Balkans.

-- Consider CSCE involvement in Greek-Albanian relations, e.g., a monitoring team to look at problems of the Greek minority in Albania, the April 10 attack near the border with Greece, Albanian migrant workers in Greece, and more general concerns about border security.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

-- Encourage Turkey to make its Balkan policy -- especially relations with Albania -- as transparent as possible to the Greeks.

-- Explore the upgrade of infrastructure in the FYROM, Albania and Bulgaria, including airport, port, road, and rail links needed for troop deployments.

-- Work to channel the energies of the Greek and Turkish private sectors into cooperative projects with U.S. firms in the Balkans.

-- ~~Consider the~~ Upgrade of the UNPROFOR contingent in FYROM.

HUMAN RIGHTS IN TURKEY

Turkey will be a stronger, more reliable partner if it has a sound democratic government and respects human rights. We must recognize that one of the most dangerous threats to Turkish democracy is that government's serious and worsening record of human rights abuses. USG reluctance to press more strongly for improvement in this area undermines our own foreign policy goals in three ways. First, Congress will respond to increasing human rights abuses and anti-democratic trends in Turkey with further restrictions on assistance, thus reducing our ability to influence GOT policy. Second, a democratic Turkey is essential to our goal of anchoring Turkey firmly in the West and to its acceptance as part of the western community. Third, unwillingness to press the GOT strongly for improvement creates questions about our broader agenda of human rights and democracy promotion as a baseline for our foreign policy.

Ankara's deteriorating human rights record includes widespread and increasing torture of detainees, repression of freedom of expression, denial of participation in the democratic process to Kurdish political parties and their elected parliamentarians, harassment of human rights lawyers and NGOs, security force abuses of civilians in the southeast, and allegations of government death squads. We can use pragmatic arguments to persuade Ankara that its human rights record demands immediate and concerted attention to improve the situation. Ankara's perpetuation of these abuses actually undermines the GOT's primary goals to protect internal security, defeat terrorism, maintain a close relationship with the U.S., and achieve closer integration with Europe.

Actions We Can Reasonably Expect the GOT To Take:

Cooperate with an international human rights mission. This could take one of three forms: a CSCE mission, an ICRC presence, or a "blue-ribbon" international delegation.

Protect the rights of pro-Kurdish parties to participate in the democratic process. The upcoming trial of the former DEP parliamentarians must be fair, transparent, and open to international observation.

Reform laws which are undemocratic or discriminatory. The GOT should repeal laws which strip duly elected representatives of their seats in Parliament without due process and which permit incommunicado detention of detainees in security cases. The GOT should revise laws which make peaceful speech a crime.

Stop torture and prosecute officials who continue the practice.

Stop government-sponsored disappearances.

Actions the USG Can Take:

Intensify the political dialogue with Turkey on human rights issues. Every high level visitor should frankly address our democracy and human rights concerns.

Make use of senior levels of the U.S. military to engage their Turkish counterparts in a dialogue on human rights.

Make it clear to the GOT that while we strongly opposed congressional language in the Foreign Ops bill, we will not whitewash any compliance report we submit to Congress.

Make it clear to the GOT that failure to improve its human rights performance can only cause further deterioration in its relations with long-time European allies and its standing with Congress.

Initiate reports on the end-use of U.S. equipment so we can assure Congress of the proper use of U.S. assistance.

Attempt to forge a productive relationship on this issue with new Foreign Minister Soysal, a leading advocate of increased human rights in Turkey and himself a victim of torture.

Engage the segments of Turkish society opposed to the continued use of torture and the treatment of DEP, and humiliated by the allegations of Turkish government death squads in the southeast, so they can demand a better accounting from their government.

In the event Turkey refuses to cooperate with either the CSCE, the ICRC or a blue ribbon panel, support invoking the Moscow mechanism.

In the event Turkey fails to take demonstrable steps to address security force abuses of civilians in the southeast, put a hold on selected transfers of military equipment.

DECL:OADR

MEASURES TO ENHANCE MACEDONIAN STABILITY

In considering steps we could take to further both long- and short-term policy objectives for bolstering The Former Yugoslav Republic of Macedonia, our primary goal is to reduce the risk of further instability in the Balkans, including the possibility of a wider war. In our attempts to facilitate Greece/FYROM negotiations, our ability to influence either side to settle the dispute is limited. Both countries' positions are dictated by internal politics over which we have no influence. Additionally, we have little practical leverage on Greece to persuade it to lift its embargo or settle the FYROM name issue responsibly, and we have few resources to offer the FYROM to alleviate its current economic difficulties.

President Gligorov has dominated FYROM politics since his election in 1991. He is a moderating force in the FYROM and to date has been personally responsible for keeping peace and stability in the FYROM in the face of mounting external and internal pressures. This fall he faces elections under extremely difficult conditions. The convergence of rapidly deteriorating economic conditions and rising international pressure on the FYROM to plug its sanctions leaks may stir popular unrest that could be exploited by the extreme nationalist opposition. Greece's embargo on the FYROM is contributing heavily to its economic implosion, with losses reaching at least $200 million.

Within the limits of existing restraints, there are some steps we could take that would bolster the FYROM's position. A relatively modest infusion of assistance now may well turn out to be critical to this effort. We should not wait to act until after a genuine crisis erupts. We must also strive to balance steps to achieve regional stability with domestic concern that we not undermine our relationship with Greece.

Short-term Objectives and Steps

Diplomatic Support

Both the U.S. and the FYROM have reaped positive results from the recent visits of Secretary of Defense Perry and Under Secretary Davis to Skopje. Gligorv's August 10 meeting with the Vice President offers another opportunity to send a strong signal of support. We should continue to seek more such high-level contacts between our countries.

Lift Greek Embargo

One of our immediate goals should be the lifting of the embargo unilaterally imposed by Greece last February. Getting

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY
DECLASSIFIED
PER E.O. 13526
VZ 2/6/2020 (5.66)
2013-0682-M

the embargo lifted would relieve rising tension over layoffs in the FYROM's heavy industry sector. Removing the embargo would also facilitate our efforts to tighten sanctions on Serbia and eliminate a major source of tension and instability. To require the FYROM to enforce the sanctions more strictly, while the Greece/FYROM border remains closed, would critically destabilize the country and the region.

Recognizing that no single message will sway the Greeks, a constant stream of demarches from us and from willing EU partners may eventually have some effect, although the Greeks will expect to receive a gesture from Skopje in return. One or more calls from the President to Papandreou during this period would help emphasize the seriousness with which the USG views the issue. We should urge other EU members to make similar demarches. In the final analysis, Papandreou is likely to make any decision on lifting the embargo on the basis of domestic political calculations. Nonetheless, actively pressing will in itself reassure Skopje that we are looking after its interests. As Macedonian elections approach in the fall , we should seek opportunities to quietly discuss with Gligorov, through Special Envoy Matthew Nimetz, what gesture the FYROM could make in order to facilitate lifting the embargo.

Sanctions Enforcement and Immediate Assistance

In the past, when we have pressed for stricter sanctions enforcement, FYROM leaders have said they could stop the leaks if the Greek embargo were lifted or if some compensation were forthcoming. Thus, if the U.S. could offer immediate tangible economic assistance to at least partially offset the strain of tightening sanctions with the Greek embargo still on, we would strengthen the GOFYROM's political will and ability to take such a step.

The Macedonians have indicated to our Skopje Liaison Office (USLO) that two types of immediate assistance would help the FYROM stave off economic disaster: adequate oil supplies for the winter, and financial support for its failing social security and unemployment fund. If the Greeks cannot be convinced to lift the embargo, they should be pressed to allow rail shipment of petroleum on humanitarian grounds. We could tell Gligorov that we will talk to the GOG about this. USLO Skopje estimates that additional social security assistance would amount to $4.1 million per month. A relatively small contribution of $10-$15 million would counter the impact of rapidly increasing embargo/sanctions-related unemployment, and would buy 3-4 months of time while we press for a solution later this fall. While we naturally would prefer channelling assistance into job-creation activities, the impact may be too long-term and not adequate to address the immediate economic and social pressures undermining Macedonian stability. We should identify undisbursed ESF funds and consider reallocating them to the FYROM to help with job creation, the social safety net, or a mix of the two.

Activating the IFI's

Another immediate step that would stimulate an influx of badly needed funds into the FYROM would be to press the World Bank and IMF at senior levels to underscore the priority we place on the FYROM's economic survival (EU balance-of-payments support, which is important in moving these IFI programs forward, has been blocked by Greece). The Bank and IMF need to hear this forcefully from us at a very high level. Despite reasonable efforts toward macro-economic stabilization, negotiations for the FYROM's IMF Stand-By Arrangement and $60 million World Bank Adjustment Loan could well be difficult, especially in light of upcoming elections. Under current circumstances, structural reform may have to be undertaken slowly, if not postponed entirely, until the embargo is lifted. EB believes that IFIs cannot be expected to prop up economies suffering from external political factors. The IFIs need to consider the arguments for flexibility and must avoid getting mired in election politics; fundamental adjustment principles cannot be abandoned.

Energize East-West Infrastructure Projects

We should also move quickly to lessen the FYROM's dependency on Serbia for trade and transportation routes by energizing the rapid development of planned East-West road/rail links with Albania and Bulgaria. In the short term this could be initiated by providing a transport advisor to Skopje and funding expansion of the border crossing at Novo Selo in the south, to speed transport and processing of winter oil imports. Currently, tanker trucks carrying the FYROM's oil imports experience long and costly delays as they traverse mountain roads and queue up at overcrowded customs facilities. As an immediate sign of support, our thinly-staffed USAID mission in Skopje could be expanded to accelerate lagging disbursement of funds for current SEED programs.

Serbia Corridor

While the Greek embargo remains in place, we should reconsider our opposition to strictly-controlled transshipments of critical imports through Serbia. The FYROM's heavy industry sector is being devastated as a result of import starvation, or through high cost alternate transport routes. This would offer some help on the employment -- as well as the political -- front, by keeping factories in operation. The "Balkan Beltway" infrastructure projects now underway can only offer partial relief. The corridor idea should be negotiated in exchange for much stricter sanctions compliance. Serbian cooperation would be necessary, but this could perhaps be handled in the context of any loosening that might flow from verified Serb efforts to seal the Bosnia/Serbia border. EB and the Sanctions Task Force object to the idea of reconsidering this corridor proposal and believe that developing alternate routes is the appropriate way to address these transport problems. We should not advocate easing the way the sanctions are applied, or granting some countries "exceptions." Were we to allow an exception for the FYROM, we would immediately face intense pressure from Bulgaria, Romania and others. Sanctions enforcement would be seriously compromised and the current Contact Group initiative would be undercut.

Full Diplomatic Relations

Establishing full diplomatic relations with the FYROM at this time remains the most significant sign of support the FYROM seeks in the face of its neighbors' doubts about its viability. As important as establishing relations is, there is little point in taking that step unless it will produce a net gain for us in the region. If the Greece/FYROM negotiations break down without resolving their outstanding differences, we will need to carefully consider whether the risks of not establishing relations outweigh Greece's probable negative reaction. We have already told Greece we cannot wait indefinitely to establish relations with Skopje. If the dispute drags on, a strong argument can be made that Greece's long-term interest in regional stability will be served by such a U.S. move.

Increase Military Presence

We should also consider whether increasing the presence of UNPROFOR troops in the FYROM would further our goal of bringing peace to Bosnia, or whether such a move would create more problems in the region. If the purpose of increasing the force would be to seal the border with Serbia, UNPROFOR's mandate would have to be revised by the Security Council. The UNSC may not agree to expand UNPROFOR at this point, given the UNSYG's inclination to shut it down. The Serb invasion in the current context is considered unlikely. Merely increasing the size of the force will not necessarily enhance its self-defense capabilities or its deterrent effect. We would have to consider whether putting more troops in the FYROM may encourage an uprising or exodus from Kosovo. Given Milosevic's new willingness to apply pressure to the Bosnian Serbs, such a move may send the wrong signal to Belgrade.

Military Assistance/Mil-to-Mil Ties

We should move forward with planned military assistance programs (such as a $125,000 FY 95 IMET program) and Secretary of Defense Perry's proposal for a Bilateral Working Group. Expanding military ties with the nascent FYROM army and increasing U.S. military assistance would allow us to influence the positive development of the Macedonian armed forces.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Congressional Reaction

Any or all of the above carrots for the FYROM could provoke significant opposition in Congress if they do not form part of an overall settlement of the Greece-FYROM dispute. Some Members, notably Senator Sarbanes, may strongly oppose any additional assistance to FYROM unless it is tied to concessions from Skopje in the negotiations. While reinforcing modestly the U.S. contingent in the UNPROFOR force in the FYROM would be problematic in the Congress, careful consultations in advance, especially by DOD and especially with the Republican leadership, could secure adequate bipartisan support.

Long-term Objectives and Steps

Economic Long-Term Measures

Our long-term policy in the FYROM and the southern Balkans should seek to solidify economic ties between Greece and its less-developed neighbors and to expand and complete embryonic East-West trade routes. In the long term, the FYROM can become a major hub in the regional transport net, at the confluence of East-West and (when reopened) North-South routes. Lessening dependence on Serbia for trade and trade routes will counteract Serbia's ability to use its monopoly on current trade routes as a destabilizing foreign policy tool. In the FYROM, continuing the processes of privatization, transition to a market economy and reforming the tax system and social safety net should be carried out by significantly expanding the SEED program and by assuring IFIs meaningful contributions to the FYROM's development.

CYPRUS

STATUS OF NEGOTIATIONS

On March 21, the United Nations issued a paper detailing UN-proposed confidence-building measures (CBMs), which included substantial changes from the original May 1993 document. These changes were mostly in favor of the Greek Cypriots. Greek-Cypriot leader Clerides immediately announced that he accepted the paper. Turkish-Cypriot leader Denktash withheld acceptance based on further clarifications.

On May 14, the Turkish Cypriots joined UN Deputy representative Gustave Feissel and SCC Robert Lamb in Vienna. A number of clarifications on the benefits which the CBMs would provide the Turkish Cypriots were agreed to. On June 4, Denktash announced that he accepted the package of CBMs based on these clarifications. Clerides, however, declared that the clarifications were not binding as the Greek Cypriots were not part of the Vienna discussions.

On July 29, the UN Security Council passed a resolution stating that both sides have accepted the CBMs in principle, and that implementation should begin. The resolution also linked implementation to immediate discussion on the overall Cyprus problem and called for movement forward. In addition, the resolution requested the Secretary General to prepare a plan of action and to report to the Security Council by the end of October. Both sides appear to have accepted this compromise.

U.S. Ambassador to Cyprus Richard Boucher met separately with Clerides and Denktash on August 11 and 12. Both leaders expressed their willingness to engage in face-to-face meetings. Boucher believes that UN-sponsored procedural meetings between the two could take place during September in Nicosia, to be followed by an October or November meeting on the substance in New York.

U.S. Interest in a Settlement

From a foreign policy perspective, there are three main reasons to solve the Cyprus problem:

-- Cyprus is a major irritant in relations between Greece and Turkey. A solution which is perceived as fair would lessen tensions between them;

-- Cyprus is strategically located in the eastern Mediterranean. A solution to the Cyprus problem would help promote security in this volatile region;

PER E.O. 13526

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY
2013-0682-M

-- A solution could help ensure continued British control of the "Sovereign Base Areas" and thus U.S. access to these important military facilities.

From a domestic political perspective, a settlement of the Cyprus problem is a major issue for the Greek-American community which has traditionally made it more difficult to carve out a constructive policy toward Turkey.

Next Steps for U.S. Policy

There are two general options for U.S. action over the next three months.

Option 1

Take an activist role, with the U.S. aggressively pushing both sides to make compromises which would lead to quick implementation of the CBMs and follow-up discussion of an overall settlement. This could include a meeting between the two leaders sponsored by the Secretary in Washington or overseas.

Option 2

Allow the UN to take the lead. This option would dovetail with the July 29 UN Security Council Resolution which called for the Secretary General to prepare a plan of action. The U.S. would maintain a supportive role. Under this option, implementation of the CBM package would remain an immediate goal, but greater emphasis would be placed on discussions on an overall solution.

Special Cyprus Coordinator

It is crucial to have a U.S. Special Cyprus Coordinator appointed immediately to help implement either option. The absence of a coordinator is diminishing U.S. influence and is creating a vacuum. The Russians are stepping in. Over the last ten days, the Russians have proposed a Security Council meeting in Geneva on Cyprus and have suggested increased involvement on the part of their Special Coordinator.

OPTIONS PAPER: LIFTING THE ARMS EMBARGO

This paper examines the possible impact and policy options open to the U.S. if the arms embargo against Bosnia were lifted as the result of a U.S. initiative. The paper assumes that our goal is to provide the Bosnian government with sufficient military capabilities to alter the situation on the battlefield and bring about Bosnian Serb acceptance of the Contact Group map. This would entail a U.S. commitment to support the government to the point it can hold its own and begin to turn the tide on the battlefield. This paper considers various other assumptions shaping our options, the range and mix of options available to us, and complications/issues we will need to address in advance of military engagement, including the need for a clear public rationale.

I. ASSUMPTIONS

Strategic Objectives: Our broader strategic objective is to prevent a broader Balkan war which could draw in Allies, damage our capacity to maintain a strong NATO, and severely strain relations with our closest Allies and Russia. The options we choose in pursuing our objectives in Bosnia must contain the risks to this strategic interest.

Multilateral Lift: Lifting the arms embargo through multilateral action is essential to securing broad-based international support and assistance after lift, including support from our NATO allies. Unilateral lift would create a major rift in the Alliance and damage relations with Russia. Ideally, there would be a provision in any UNSC resolution lifting the embargo that would call on member states/regional organizations to use all necessary means to defend at least Sarajevo and the other safe areas, and secure Bosnian Serb acceptance of the Contact Group Proposal. We should approach key allies early regarding the type of support they might be willing to provide, especially to defend Sarajevo. Without the use of Allied bases, particularly those in Italy, our ability to support the Bosnian government would be severely limited.

Bosnian Serb Reaction: Based on their past behavior, the Bosnian Serbs will likely react aggressively and pre-emptively to any lifting of the arms embargo. The Bosnian Serbs often exaggerate their military capabilities. Their aim would be to bring maximum pressure immediately to bear against the government in the hopes of forcing a settlement on their terms before the military tide could be turned. The eastern enclaves and Sarajevo would be priority targets, though in the case of the latter they might opt for strangulation and shelling rather than outright military take-over. Severing the Tuzla area from government-held lands to the south could be another possibility, as would widening the Posavina corridor. Key variables shaping their response include: the state of Belgrade-Pale relations, perceptions of international resolve to counter Bosnian Serb offensives, the willingness of Belgrade to intervene with men and material. With the U.S. perceived as a party to the conflict, acts of terrorism against U.S. interests cannot be ruled out.

Bosnian Government Vulnerabilities: The vulnerability of the eastern enclaves and Sarajevo, combined with the lag between lifting the embargo and increasing Bosnian military capabilities, virtually guarantee that lifting the embargo will require from the outset air support and a continued humanitarian relief effort. This is based on the assumption that while we might be able to tolerate the fall of relatively isolated and difficult to defend enclaves, we politically could not tolerate the fall or strangulation of Sarajevo. This argues strongly against a "lift and leave" option.

That said, Bosnian government forces have improved substantially over the past two years and the Interagency Balkan Task Force (Baseline Assessment Paper: Leveling the Battlefield) believes they can probably hold their own against determined Bosnian Serb assaults on the core Federation areas in central Bosnia so long as Federation unity is maintained. The Interagency Balkan Task Force estimates that Sarajevo, however, currently has only approximately 30 days worth of food supplies on hand.

Fate Of UNPROFOR: Lifting the arms embargo will almost certainly lead to UNPROFOR withdrawal. The British say they need 30 days advance notice to withdraw in an orderly fashion and 72 hours in a hostile situation where troops are extricated (with our help) and equipment is left behind. Among other things, UNPROFOR's departure will seriously complicate both air operations against the Serbs and any humanitarian relief effort. On the other hand, it should give us greater scope for taking robust action without fear of reprisals against UN personnel on the ground. While the idea of an UNPROFOR II deployed only in Federation territory as a stabilizing factor has been put forward, such a force would probably have little impact on the course of the conflict unless it were structured as a real combat force.

II. MILITARY OPTIONS/CAPABILITIES

In determining military support options, we need to consider several factors: what the Bosnians have now, what they need to alter the situation on the ground, whether new infusions of men and material on the Bosnian Serb side will increase those needs, and what we can and should do to invalidate or lessen the impact of negative factors. For example, we need to consider ways (such as a Kosovo Christmas-type warning) to reduce the likelihood of Serbian intervention or assistance.

We also need to consider the possibility that a convincing demonstration of force, applied early on and internationally supported, could substantially reduce the level and length of the military support effort needed to bring the Bosnian Serbs around. Similarly, the demonstrated ability of the Bosnian government to absorb weapons and improve its military capabilities over the last two years should be taken into account.

The analysis below views our policy choices in terms of light, medium, and heavy air support/arming options. But it should be noted that an argument can also be made that our real choice centers around a more fundamental question: whether or not we are willing to deploy U.S. ground forces. If we are not, then maximum and early use of air power and a maximum arming option are probably necessary to achieve our objectives. If we are not prepared for such an approach at the outset, then we should be prepared to escalate quickly in response to possible Serb actions.

Option 1: A Minimalist Military Support Option

Without substantial immediate outside support, Bosnian government forces would not be capable of lifting the blockade of Sarajevo or preventing the overrunning of the smaller eastern enclaves. As noted above, they would probably be able to withstand assaults on their core central areas. Needless to say, the capitulation of Sarajevo would be a great blow to the government and a setback to any international efforts to help them. It would also encourage the Bosnian Serbs to continue the conflict and make a negotiated settlement less likely.

Even if the U.S. did not furnish material support to the Bosnian government, weapons and possibly troops provided by friendly Islamic states would still flow into the country, perhaps in substantial numbers. This would be of great concern to Serbia, Macedonia and the rest of Europe. Islamization of the military re-supply effort would have a broad and long-term impact on the Balkan region and Europe. Aid would also arrive from Islamic states not friendly to the U.S., such as Iran. Such an effort would not be comparable to a determined U.S. effort but would over time improve the capability of Bosnian government forces versus the Bosnian Serbs.

The Joint Staff (Annex: Rearming the Federation) and Interagency Balkan Task Force (Baseline Assessment Paper: Leveling the Battlefield) estimate a robust U.S. effort would take up to a year to make government forces competitive. Any non-U.S. effort would probably take longer, and might never enable the government to level the playing field, particularly if the FRY increased its own arms supplies to Pale. Any Islamization of the military resupply effort, moreover, could cause the Muslim-Croat rapprochement to fray, itself jeopardizing the resupply effort.

Option 2: Lift With Interim Military Support

U.S. support for the Bosnian government for a limited period in the wake of lifting the embargo would obviously increase the ability of the government to compete with the Bosnian Serbs on more equal terms. How well they could compete would depend directly on the level and nature of support provided.

Sarajevo: Given the importance and vulnerability of Sarajevo, any initial U.S. support should focus on ways to keep humanitarian relief flowing into the city. Although air drops might provide a portion of the needed relief, the ideal solution would be to open up a land corridor running from core Federation territories into Sarajevo. This would at the very least require commitment of U.S. airpower, acting in concert with Bosnian government forces. In this regard, the Joint Staff believes that we should not assume that air power alone can prevent the fall of Sarajevo. Thus, if saving the city is a bottom line objective, we should be prepared to do what is necessary to save the city, up to and including the insertion of U.S. ground forces.

Determining what would work is clearly a priority objective and should be completed well prior to lifting the embargo. The August 9, 1993 NAC airstrike decision would provide adequate authority for NATO airstrikes, assuming NATO agreed to participate. In the wake of the departure of key allies from UNPROFOR, it would be highly questionable whether NATO Allies could reach a consensus on further participation. If NATO were willing to take this on, under the August 9 NAC decision, authorization from UN Secretary General Boutros Ghali for the first strike would still be needed. If the U.S. had to act outside the NATO context, perhaps as head of a coalition of the willing, we would need to decide whether to seek UN authority to undertake the strikes.

The Eastern Enclaves: The U.S. might also wish to help the Bosnian government defend the highly vulnerable eastern enclaves against Bosnian Serb attacks. If NATO were willing to take this on, we anticipate the Allies would require a new NAC decision reflecting the changed circumstances. The Allies would also want UN authority for NATO to act. If the U.S. acted alone, or as head of a coalition, new UN authority would presumably be required.

CLINTON LIBRARY PHOTOCOPY

Supporting Bosnian Government Forces Elsewhere: Under a limited support option, the U.S. might decide not to risk its aircraft in what might be regarded as an uphill struggle to prevent at least the smaller enclaves from being overrun. The same might hold true for providing air support for Bosnian government forces facing attack in other parts of Bosnia. If we assume that these forces are capable of holding their own, we may wish to intervene only if the situation on a particular battlefront becomes desperate. Any intervention, particularly if it occurred apart from a safe area, could require new NATO authorization (if NATO were involved) and possibly additional UN authority.

Providing Equipment and Training: The U.S. would probably want to provide the Bosnian government with equipment and training as part of lifting the arms embargo. Clearly, the more of each we provided, and the sooner we provided it, the sooner the Bosnian government would be capable of bringing pressure to bear on the Bosnian Serbs to settle, and if necessary, of turning the tide on the battlefield. Viewed in this way, option 2 would behoove us to go all out to provide the necessary materiel and to provide it as soon as possible. Both the Joint Staff (Annex: Rearming the Federation) and the Interagency Balkan Task Force (Baseline Assessment Paper: Leveling the Battlefield) agree that a strong U.S. effort could equip and train Bosnian government forces to this task in no more than a year, although this would be an expensive proposition. The Task Force acknowledges, however, that Bosnian Serb military operations could divert government attention and lengthen this timetable.

The Interagency Balkan Task Force estimates government requirements at 120-200 tanks, 60-100 APCs, 200-350 artillery pieces and 25-40 MRLs. They also estimate 2,000 trucks would be needed, along with communication equipment, ammunition, fuel and other supplies. The Joint Staff estimates the price tag for acquiring such supplies would run over $3 billion.

The alternative to providing the government with the equipment it needed to turn the tide would be to give them less than what they needed. Although less expensive in the short run, this would risk prolonging the war, perhaps indefinitely, resulting in a higher cost in human life and inviting continuing domestic criticism and pressure to do more. In this regard, the Joint Staff outlines two less robust force upgrading initiatives, but they are not considered here since they would perforce not significantly alter the situation on the ground.

Under any approach, we would want to spread the burden as much as possible. Given the high costs of providing weaponry and transporting it, we would presumably want to pass the hat at an early stage to defer our own expenses. This would certainly involve approaching rich Islamic states and selected other states such as Japan. We would also want to strongly encourage other (particularly NATO) nations to provide equipment, although avoiding overcomplicating the array of weapons and other materiel that Bosnian government forces are obliged to master is probably a virtue.

Option 3: Lift With Long-term Support

If the Joint Staff and the Interagency Task Force are correct in their estimates, other things being equal, the Bosnian government should be able to begin turning the tide against the Bosnian Serbs after about a year. To the extent we do not frontload our support, the less pressure there will be on the Bosnian Serbs to accept a negotiated settlement, the longer it will take the government to get on equal footing with the Serbs and the longer our active involvement will last. Assuming that the war continues for some time after the playing field has been leveled, the Bosnian government will continue to need our support. The need for airpower will diminish, although the longer it is used the more quickly the government is likely to succeed in gaining its military objectives. Government forces will also need to replace weapons and other materiel lost in combat.

In an important sense, the distinction between options 2 and 3 is an artificial one. The less support we provide at the outset, the longer our involvement is likely to last. If we are going to provide the government with military equipment and air support, we should try to give them the ability to take the initiative as soon as they possibly can. We will in any event need to continue to support them until they are able to take the initiative, and on a contingency basis, in the event of unexpected reverses on the ground or FRY intervention. We have good reason to believe that if we can keep them afloat during the first key months--and this also means developing a strategy enabling Sarajevo to survive--we can be fairly confident that they will be able to field an increasingly capable force, bring increasing pressure to bear on the Bosnian Serbs to accept a negotiated settlement, and eventually, if necessary, begin to turn the tide. In seeking to lift the arms embargo, this should be our primary goal.

III. OTHER CONSIDERATIONS/ISSUES

NATO and UN Support

Clearly, the U.S. would have an interest in internationalizing the effort in Bosnia to the maximum extent possible. It would be very much in our interest politically to make this a NATO operation and to seek UN, and therefore, Russian support. To do this, we must, as a first step, get the arms embargo lifted multilaterally. A robust diplomatic initiative would be required to bring the allies on board. To the extent we have to go it alone we sacrifice key equities in NATO and in our relations with the Russians and the UN. Unilateral lift would rupture consensus within NATO on a key European security issue and could create a serious, long-term rift in the alliance. The military and economic burden would also fall more squarely on our shoulders. Without NATO, basing for air operations could become a serious problem.

Dealing with Reversals on the Ground

We must be prepared to deal with setbacks at each step of the escalatory ladder. At each stage, if a given mix of air power and arming options is not working, we will need to reach a judgment as to whether the setback is temporary and tactical or a reflection of a more fundamental problem. If the latter, we will need to decide whether to go in more deeply or conclude it is time to cut our losses. We need to recognize going in that air power will be impotent to stop the fighting once it enters major populated areas.

Preventing Spillover

Bosnia does not exist in a vacuum. We have a goal of preventing the conflict from spilling over into other parts of the region. Lifting the arms embargo could have a serious destabilizing impact on neighboring Krajina, in Kosovo, and in Macedonia.

Krajina: Although UNPROFOR may have departed from Bosnia, we have a strong interest in seeing it remain in both Croatia and Macedonia. UNPROFOR departure from the former could lead to new fighting in Krajina and to renewed conflict between Croatia and Serbia. We would need in any event to persuade Zagreb not to take advantage of events in Bosnia by seeking an outcome in Krajina which might only make things worse.

We will also need to confront how to handle the arms embargo against Croatia. Croatia is essential as a port of entry and conduit for sending equipment into Bosnia. Presumably we would need to either lift the arms embargo against Croatia or provide for right of transit. Either alternative would probably result in a substantial increase in Croatian military capabilities and alarm both the Krajina Serbs and Belgrade. This would need to be carefully managed.

Macedonia/Kosovo: Although a Serbian adventure in Macedonia may seem unlikely, our forces there are performing an important deterrent function and, if anything, should be strengthened. We should consider reiterating our Christmas warning to the Serbs that we would be prepared to employ military force against them in Kosovo and in Serbia proper in the event of a conflict in Kosovo caused by Serb action. UNPROFOR troops that remain near the Serbian border might be targets of retaliation.

Serbia: Lifting the embargo would probably not lead directly to Belgrade's intervention. The more successful the Bosnian government is on the ground, however, the greater the pressure will be on Serbia to intervene. This is something we should consider warning them about at an early stage. Should they nonetheless overtly intervene with men and materiel, we would need to consider whether to take military action against them. This would presumably require new authorities from both NATO (if this is a NATO operation) and the UN, unless we sought an omnibus authority in conjunction with lifting the embargo at the beginning of the process that dealt with all such contingencies.

Impact on the Federation

The impact of lifting the arms embargo on the Federation will depend on the course of events on the ground. The more prolonged the conflict and the more arms that flow to government forces, the more strain there will be on the Federation and the greater the risk to its survival. Success on the ground which leads the Bosnians to escalate their war aims could also prove a source of tension. On the other hand, the strategic reasons underlying Muslim-Croat cooperation vis-a-vis the Serbs will remain a positive factor and Zagreb's continued support for the Federation will be critical.

Keeping the Negotiating Track Going

Our primary goal in lifting the arms embargo is to pressure the Bosnian Serbs into accepting the Contact Group map, and failing this, to give the Bosnian government the means to begin to turn the tide. Any decision to lift the arms embargo, therefore, should go hand in hand with continuing efforts to obtain a negotiated settlement. As the pressure increases against the Bosnian Serbs, we should continue our efforts to get them to accept a negotiated settlement. As time passes, the international community (the Contact Group if it is still in place) may decide to alter the offer on the table. It is also possible that the Bosnian government will prove increasingly resistant to a negotiated settlement as its prospects on the battlefield improve. This will require careful management.

Need for Public Rationale

We need to develop an easily understood rationale for any U.S. military action in Bosnia in order to ensure we can sustain our involvement long enough to get the job done. Our public affairs strategy will need to dampen Kuwait-type expectations of an easy and relatively painless success, with no real setbacks along the way, as well as Somalia-type situation, where public reaction to media images of an American soldier being dragged through the streets led to a collapse of support for our effort and early withdrawal. Apart from the fact that we are dealing with the Balkans and not Somalia, the likelihood of this kind of atrocity being perpetrated will be reduced if we do not have a troop presence. We would, however, need to be prepared for the shooting down of U.S. planes and for captured and possibly tortured U.S. pilots.

Our most immediate public affairs concern, however, given the vulnerability of the enclaves and the time lag between lift and its impact on Bosnian ability to defend themselves and turn the tide, will likely be to ensure the public understands that there will be no quick military fix and the situation is likely to get worse before it gets better. To the extent that early and decisive use of air power neutralizes the Serbs' offensive capabilities and buys time for the Bosnians to level the playing field, our military support effort will be able to concentrate on less controversial training and supply functions. This should simplify the public affairs task and help prepare us for low-level, low-risk involvement for the longer haul, if that proves necessary.
